The Coal Question!

Notice to our Customers

The price of coal will advance at the mines at least 50c. per ton at the rate of 10c. per month beginning May 1st next.

Both the United States and Canadian railways, notwithstanding the advanced freight of last year, have not been able to meet running expenses for months past.

The probabilities are that freight rates will be advanced in the near future—still higher. Therefore there is no cheap coal in sight.

We urge our customers to lay in their next winter's supply at once before we have to advance prices.

Rev. C. W. DeMille, B. At the Napanee District Meeting, held on Wednesday, May 28th, the following address, accompanied by a purse, was presented to him, which shows the very high esteem in which he be held by his brother ministers and laymen.

THE ADDRESS

To the Rev. C. W. DeMille, B.A.

Dear Bro.—Your brethren Ministerial and Lay representatives of the Napanee District take this opportunity of expressing their appreciation of your efficient services and the very excellent spirit which has characterized you, and which you have ever manifested.

We congratulate you on the larger sphere of service that has opened to you and you will ever have our best wishes for your success in it, but we regret that it necessitates your removed, not only from our district, but from the Conference as well. We are glad that we are privileged to retain your membership and we here assure you that your memory will never leave us.

We extend to you and Mrs. DeMille our sincerest wishes for many years of service to the cause which we all love so well, and we ask you to accept this slight token of our personal regard, and we trust you will use it in a way that will ever remind you of the many friends you leave behind.

THE G. W. V. A. REPLY TO MR. VANNEST'S LETTER

Which appeared in the Beaver Two Weeks Ago.

To the Editor of The Napanee Express :

Dear Sir :

The following resolution was carried unanimously at the regular meeting of the Napanee Branch G.W.V.A. held May 2nd :

Whereas the attention of this Association has been called to an article published in the Napanee Beaver of the 9th inst. over the signature of W. H. Vannest, in which article the writer among other things, says, regarding a memorial hall, "I have heard this question discussed by almost all the prominent men of all parties in and about Enterprise and all are pronounced against the erection of such a hall or any other memorial" ..... I learn that this question will come before the County Council at its June Session. Larger delegations should be present from every municipality in Lennox & Addington to protest against a Memorial Hall or any other memorial except what we already have."

Whereas this Association, relying upon the generosity of the people of Lennox & Addington to erect a suitable memorial, did not intend, unless invited to do so, to take any part in the discussion as to the form the memorial should take, and

Whereas said article and particularly the portions above quoted display an ignorant contempt for the sacrifices of our fallen comrades which should be promptly resented by every honest and patriotic citizen.

Therefore be it resolved,—

1. That the Napanee Branch of the Great War Veterans' Association heartily approves the erection of a suitable memorial or memorials to the memory of its citizens who gave their lives for the great cause of Liberty and Jupstice.

2. That this Association desires to place on record its feeling of indignation and contempt for the writer of the above mentioned article.

3. That this Association declines to accept the word of Mr. Vannest that the prominent men of all parties are surprise are pronounced against the erection of a memorial of any kind and believes that such a statement is a gratituous insult to the loyal citizens of that part of the County

4. That this Association further believes that Mr. Vannest deliberately slanders "the fathers of some of our dead heroes" when he intimates that they share the views to which he gives expression. In the opinion of this Association Mr. Vannest stands alone upon a platform too small to accommodate anyone but himself.

If you want a Varnish that gives satisfaction in every way, ask for "Copaline." Can be used for floors, linoleums, wood work, furniture, in fact any place where a good varnish is required. All size cans at WALLACE'S Drug Store, agents for Napanee.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Ford Receive the Scouts Bronze Medal

The grand Scout Rally held in Toronto on Tuesday, the particulars of which were fully reported in the Toronto Press, was of special interest to Napanee on account of the presentation by Sir Robert Baden-Powell of the bronze cross to the parents of the late Scout Frank Ford. Accompanying the presentation the Chief handed them the following letter from the Governor-General.

Government House, Ottawa,

The Duchess and I wish you and Mrs. Ford to accept our sincere sympathy in the loss you have sustained by the death of your gallant son. It will, however, be consolation to you to know that he lost his life in the noble cause of trying to rescue a companion. Believe me,

Yours very truly,

WHO STOLE THE RED AND WHITE COW?

Two Men Accused, Victims of Circumstantial Evidence, Found Not Guilty.

A peculiar combination of circumstances occuring on the night of the 25th of March last at the Township of Richmond in the County of Lennox and Addington, landed Stanley Harten, of Tyendinaga, and A. Bonheur, of Richmond, before the Magistrate at Napanee, Friday on a charge of cattle stealing, one of the most serious offenses in the Criminal Code. Through the investigation of the local authorities a chain of circumstantial evidence was woven around the accused.

On the night in question a red and white cow was taken from the stable of Mrs. Hyderman on the Richmond road. The accused were seen with a fox horse and open buggy standing on the roadside in front of Mrs. Hyderman's that night. About midnight two men with a fox horse and an open buggy were seen on one of the roads in the vicinity of them driving a red and white cow answering the description of the stolen animal. Early next morning two men were seen near Lonsdale in Tyendinaga with an open buggy and a fox horse, one of them driving a cow.

The defense showed, however, that Mr. Harten, who is working for Mr. Ross McLaren's farm at Lonsdale, bears a good reputation. The night in question he drove his father from Lonsdale to the home off Mr. Bonheur, the other accused, in Richmond, and on his way back his horse stumbled in front of Mrs. Hyderman's and broke a shaft. He went back and got Mr. Bonheur and together they fixed the buggy, being engaged on the roadside at the work some time. It was, however, shown that neither of the accused were in the vicinity at the time the cow was seen being driven along the road, and one of the Crown witnesses swore that the accused were not the men who had the cow the next morning at Lonsdale.

The Magistrate said after hearing the evidence and argument, he was satisfied the defendants were innocent, and honorably acquitted them.

U. M. Wilson, Crown Attorney, acted for the Prosecutor, and W. C. Mikel, K.C., for the ceffence.

SELBY

Friday evening, 23rd inst., the Local Union of Women's Christian Temperance held their first entertainment, which was of a very superior order throughout. In his usual cherry and humorous manner, Rev. E. Farnsworth made a very efficient chairman. The main feature of the programme was a medal contest engaged in by seven junior students of high school standing, and it was a rather difficult for the judges to decide which was the winner, as each number seemed so appropriately selected and excellently rendered. Much credit is due Mrs. Irvine for the painstaking way in which she trained the contestants. After careffu deliberation the judges decided in favor of Miss Helen Sexsmith, and the President, Mrs. H. Martin, took great pleasure in pinning a silver medal on the winning member, and a silver pin on each of the others.

The Corresponding Secretary, Miss Fitzpatrick, gave a very encouraging report of the work done since organization.

Miss Wartman, Napanee, delighted the audience with several numbers on the piano.

Miss Vera Armstrong received hearty encores to her vocal selections, and graciously responded. The audience were loud in their praises of Miss Armstrong as a soloist.

The local violinists, Knapp and Farnsworth, accompanied by Miss Wartman, was much appreciated.

After the first part of the programme four of our boys, R. Carscallen, L. Innis, W. Denison and E. Price, lately returned from overseas, were called to the platform while Mrs. Adam Frisken, in a short address, expressed the gladness with which the whole community welcomed them back to childhood's happy home, to friends and dear ones. Then all joined in singing, "Home Again." The boys, who took none the worse for their trying experience, responded in turn and expressed their pleasure of not only being able to get to their bit, but to get back again to their little home town.

Refreshments were served and a most enjoyable evening was brought to a close.

Origin of "Lime-Juice."

It is generally known that a familiar, though not altogether affectionate, name given sailors by their American brothers of the sea is "lime-juicer," or, more briefly, "limie." To most of us the origin of the pleasantry was wrapped in obscurity.

But the London Lancet, in the course of a learned inquiry pertaining to scurvy, uncovers the fact that the consumption of lime juice was introduced into the British navy as a measure against scurvy, and resulted in the disappearance of that disease early in the last century.

The so-called lime juice was really lemon juice, and not connected with the American lime. But the origin of "lime-juicer" becomes apparent.

PUT BLAME ON RUSSIA

Kaiser's Guilt Denied by German Peace Delegates.

Allies Have Almost Completed Terms That Will Be Imposed on Austria —Army Is To Be Reduced to 15,000 Men and All Military Supplies Must Be Handed Over to Victors.

PARIS, May 27. — Information coming directly from the German commission and unqualified in utterance is that the treaty will not be signed unless unexpected modification is made in the terms.

This is based upon Count von Brockdorff - Rantzau's conference with Chancellor Scheidemann at Spa.

The Germans will go through the form of submitting notes in each separate item, so the record may be complete, but according to the enemy delegates a definite position has been assumed to reject the treaty. The same note was issued by the Austrians on responsibility, in which the Kaiser's guilt is denied and the blame for war is laid on Russia.

Earlier they sent a note on the highly important question of private property in war-time, which, according to the terms of the treaty, is made inviolate.

The manner in which reparations are to be executed makes the distinction more apparent, for the treaty demands that the German Government officially seized property of all the nationals lying in allied nations, which is to be retained by allen property custodians in the allied countries, who have about $2,500,000,000 worth of German wealth.

By this method private property is converted into national holdings which can legally be expropriated by creditor countries.

The regulations concerning Dantzig are to be modified to make them less objectionable to Germany.

Premier Clemenceau reply to the two German notes on the Petrograd western boundaries of Germany denies Count von Brockdorff-Rantzau's assertion that German territories are the subject of shifting from one sovereignty to another like pawns in a game.

M. Clemenceau points out that the desire is that the inhabitants of the territories in dispute shall be taken into consideration, the only exception being that part of Prussian Moresnet prohibited to German persons, which is transferred to Belgium as partial reparation for the destruction of Belgian forests by the Germans.

It has been announced that the treaty to be presented to Austria will be laid before the Austrian delegation probably this week.

The Council of Four considered the military terms as framed by Marshal Fosh, commander-in-chief of the allied armies; Gen. Diaz, supreme commander of the Italian army, and other military leaders. Austria's formidable army of upward of a million men, which was second only to that of Germany, is reduced by the treaty to 15,000 men: virtually all military supplies would be surrendered or destroyed and further military production abolished.

The naval terms are similarly sweeping, all warships being surrendered and Austria's position as a naval power terminated.

Dr. Karl Renner, Austrian Chancellor and head of the German-Austrian peace delegation, has addressed a note to Premier Clemenceau complaining over the delay of the Peace Congress.

France Deports Boris.

PARIS, May 27.—As the result of certain activities which it is intimated have no direct political bearing, Grand Duke Boris Vladimirovich, who once attracted attention by quaffing champagne from feminine slippers and other light-hearted pranks, has been requested to leave France.

Although no formal order of expulsion had been issued, French secret service agents have accompanied the Duke Boris to the Spanish frontier a week ago. The Spanish Government, however, finds it difficult to credit that his presence in Spain was undesirable, so he was obliged to retrace his steps and head for Italy, to which country he was permitted to enter three days ago. He had been living in Paris for several months past.

New British Loan.

LONDON, May 27.—The issue of a new British Government loan is imminent, probably to the amount of £750,000,000. This loan will be four per cent., issued at 80 and although the date of redemption will be from forty to fifty years hence drawing at par will begin at an early date.

These early drawings will be a feature of the loan, for they will make the new loan a premium bond issue without objectionable lottery features. Thus the purchaser of, say 1,000 pounds of the loan, who is fortunate enough to have his bond or bonds drawn in five years time would get 200 pounds interest, less tax, and 200 pounds profit on redemption.

HAWKER WAS RESCUED

Brave Airmen Picked Up by Danish Vessel.

Australian Aviator and His Navigator Had Been Given Up as Dead When Tramp Steamer, Which Picked Them Up In Mid-ocean, Arrived Off Coast of Scotland and Reported Them Safe.

LONDON, May 27. — Missing for six days and virtually given up for lost, Harry G. Hawker and his navigator, Lieut.-Commander MacKenzie Grieve, the British airmen who essayed a flight from St. John's, Newfoundland, across the Atlantic Ocean, without protection against disaster, save what their frail airplane afforded, are safe aboard a British warship off the Orkneys.

Some 1,100 miles out from Newfoundland and 800 from the Irish coast, on Monday, May 19, the lone aviators, making the best of an engine trouble which was failing to function properly, were forced to alight on the water. The little Danish steamer Mary, bound from New Orleans and Norfolk for Aarhus, Denmark, picked the wayfarers up and continued on her northward voyage.

Not until Wednesday night, the captain of the steamer was obliged to withhold the good tidings of the rescue, did the Australian Admiralty, of Lewis, where the information was signalled by means of flags that Hawker and Grieve were aboard his ship.

Immediately word was flashed to the British Admiralty, which sent out destroyers to overhaul the Danish vessel and obtain absolute confirmation. This was done, and one of the destroyers took the airmen off, and later transferred them to the flagship Revenge.

From this safe haven Hawker sent a message Sunday that his machine had stopped owing to the blocking of the water circulation system.

Hawker's plan was to soar away from his starting point, Pilot Hawker let loose his wheels and undergearing, thereby lightening the weight of the machine by a considerable amount, but making a possible landing on the water a far more hazardous venture. This, however, probably proved of much advantage when it became necessary to alight on the surface of the water. The airplane remained afloat without difficulty during the hour and a half it took the Danish steamer to come up and effect a rescue.

All England is stirred by the news of the rescue of these two stout-hearted aviators, but owing to the difficulties of communication, some time must pass before the full details of the most remarkable voyages ever undertaken are known.

It is officially announced by the Admiralty that Hawker and Grieve were picked up in latitude 50.20, longitude 29.30, having alighted close to the little Danish steamer Mary, owing to a stoppage of circulation in the water pipes between the radiator and the water pump.

The airplane, a Sopwith machine, was not salvaged. The first report of the aviators since their famous jump off last Saturday came when the Mary, which was bound from Norfolk to Aarshuus, rounded the Butt of Lewis Sunday and wig-wagged the fact that she had Hawker and Grieve aboard.

"Saved hands of Sopwith airplane," was the signal.

"Is it Hawker?" was the question sent out by the flags from the Butt, which is the most northerly point of the Hebrides group of Scotland.

"Yes," laconically replied the Mary. The Admiralty immediately sent out a fast torpedo-boat destroyer to intercept the Mary and take off the aviators. After several hours word was flashed that the destroyer had come across the steamer and transferred Hawker and Grieve, and was taking them to Thurso, on the northern coast of Scotland.

The news of the rescue has electrified all Britain. Eight destroyers, after a fruitless search in the Atlantic for 300 miles from the Irish coast, had given up the quest, and there was practically no hope that the airmen were alive. But the forlorn hope that the aviators might be picked up by some craft without wireless has materialized. The Danish steamer Mary, crawling along at nine knots, was the lucky vessel, and the British destroyers that watched at the Butt of Lewis as she proceeded on her way past Scotland, left the public to speculate wonderingly over the details of the two men's adventures. Nothing except some great battle has excited London more than the rescue of the fliers. The public was disposed to question whether the first report could be trusted, and the Admiralty announced that it was taking measures to, verify the report indicated doubt, which the Woolsun's message dispelled.

Mrs. Harry Hawker, the aviator, received news from the Mary early Sunday morning at her home at Surbiton, Surrey, and at once sent a telegram to her husband, reading: 'Mr. Hawker has been found. He is on the boat Mary bound for Denmark.'

A crowd of villagers soon gathered and showered Mrs. Hawker with congratulations.

The news person in England who had always held hope was Mrs. Hawker. She always maintained that Provenance would stay-over in the air, though she received condolences from all classes of people, including the King, she said Sunday that she knew they were not represented in the voting, their delegates withholding their votes.

Although the vote for a general supporting strike was overwhelming, does not mean an immediate tie-up. Following the vote the delegates gave thought to the best method of putting it into effect, and the men carried a proposal to put into the hands of a central committee of fifteen the power to call a strike of such unions as they consider necessary in order to support the metal trades. At the same time, the employers do not concede the eight-hour day.

The vote in favor of a sympathetic strike was reached after a discussion that continued for hours and was featured by a good deal of ignoral excitement and not a little bitterness. When the meeting got under way it was recognized that the strike issue was clear. The conference between the employers and the metal trades' representatives had failed, and officials of the strikers announced to the meeting that a 44-hour week was unacceptable, and that they would remain out until the 44-hour week was granted.

STRIKE IS SPREADING

Unions in Winnipeg Show No Signs of Weakening.

General Sympathetic Walk-outs Are Reported in Edmonton and Calgary—Plan of Central Strike Committee Has Been Rejected by Citizens of Western Metropolis—Federal Employes Dismissed.

WINNIPEG, May 27. — The Winnipeg City Council, despite vigorous opposition from the Labor members, has decided to reorganize the municipal fire department along lines that will forbid the firemen to join other unions or to sympathize in strike.

Despite the fact that the Winnipeg general strike has been condemned by leading officials of every branch of governmental authority, the union forces have made no move toward industrial peace. An announcement that a Winnipeg public clerks' union would automatically ousted on Monday from the Federal service. Mr. Robertson gave the workers until noon to return to work or to stand discharged. Only a few went back. A similar order by the Provincial Government to provincial telephone operators received the same response.

The City Council met Monday to consider a communication made public by Mayor Charles F. Gray requesting that no city employe who joined the sympathetic strike should be allowed unless he signs a written agreement to not leave his post in the future.

The Citizens' Committee, which recently endorsed the principle of collective bargaining between employers and union men, but which refused to agree to the plan submitted by the labor leaders as a basis of strike settlement, Monday received the formal support of the Government.

Minister Robertson issued this statement: "The conditions for the right of collective bargaining, which are stated to be the cause of the Winnipeg strike, seem to be generally misunderstood. The employers, parties to the original dispute; the president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and the Citizen's Committee as constituted since the strike occurred, all agree to the principle of collective bargaining as it is interpreted, namely, the right of any individual to belong to a labor union if he so desires, and the right of employes to bargain with their employers concerning matters affecting any individual plant or industry. The Citizens' Strike Committee, however, interpret the right of collective bargaining to mean that the general body of the trade has the power to approve or reject any agreement that may be satisfactory to the employer and employes and their bargaining prices were paid in the case of two loads, as high as $17 per cwt.

The Dominion's Gift.

The Department of the Naval Service has concurred in the proposal of the British Admiralty that the gift of a silver plate and an investment bond presented by Canadians to H. M. S. Dominion shall be transferred to H. M. S. Canada. A subscription for the purchase of this silver plate and investment bond for $1,500 to be presented to the Dominion was made in 1905. The British Admiralty now points out that the Dominion has become an obsolete vessel, and is not in full commission, and that her name no longer denotes purely Canadian significance. Hence the suggestion that the gift be transferred to the Canada.

Air Liners Will Make Transatlantic Trips, Declares A. Holt Thomas

AIR liners to New York—flying Leviathans to carry 150 passengers—are foreshadowed by A. Holt Thomas, head of the British Aircraft Manufacturing Company, discussing two paramount questions at present exercising the minds of the British Air Ministry and aeronautical authorities in this country:

1. The position of the naval and military air forces in the future in relation to commercial aviation.

2. The problem of official sanction for the early opening of the huge commercial air services now projected not only in England, but on the continent.

"There is a distinct danger," said Holt Thomas, "in endeavoring to make the large naval and military air force which I think absolutely necessary to the country dependent on the development of commercial aeronautics, as we must realize that Great Britain, far from being the best country for aviation, is the worst.

"Our territory ends in mid-Channel, and our own country is too small, except from north to south, really to develop aeronautics. A country like Australia can quite easily create a large air force for offensive and defensive purposes by the use of commercial aeronautics, because it could have huge transcontinental lines.

"It is dangerous if the public gets the idea that we need not have a flying corps, and that commercial aeronautics will provide and sustain the necessary machines, pilots and organization. In my opinion, entirely owing to the situation of Great Britain, this is perfectly impossible.

"It is true, of course, that we have designs, pilots, etc., second to none, but the size of England entirely prohibits the extensive use of air service such as could be used in France.

"Paris to Nice, for instance, is about 600 miles, and France is almost as wide as it is long, and services across France in every direction will certainly enable a large number of machines and personnel to be used which could be called into the war.

"The British Empire is in a different position. South Africa, Australia, Canada and India are examples of countries which could be usefully developed by aerial services, and this, of course, will necessitate a line from London to each of these dominions.

"I am afraid, however, that so far as Great Britain is concerned, a French machine will carry the mails for France, an Italian machine will carry the mails for Italy, and so on.

"The Imperial Air Fleet, which is quite another matter, may be partly composed of commercial machines, but it is necessary to explode the fallacy that Great Britain itself should in any way be dependent on a commercial fleet for naval and military purposes.

"Now as to the second point. It would be doing no good to commercial aeronautics, in my opinion, for the Air Minister to hasten permission to fly abroad.

"The success of aerial lines will depend on organization and if official permission is withheld long enough the whole organization may be completed and will lead to public confidence in commercial aeronautics instead of want of confidence.

"In my opinion the Atlantic will be crossed by airplane for certain this year, but frankly I cannot see a feature airplane service between London and New York.

"I can, however, easily imagine a hydro-aerial liner carrying, say 150 passengers at double the speed at present attained by steamships, providing a regular and reliable service and being much more pleasant to travel in than the largest liner afloat.

"The wind overseas, however strong it may be, is steady, and I believe many British and American travelers will pay an unlimited price for an airship journey from London to New York, especially when, as can easily be arranged, they can travel in a comfortable cabin."

A New Coat-of-Arms.

The Canadian Government is considering adopting a new coat-of-arms for the Dominion—one which shall represent all the provinces in the Confederation. The present coat of arms is representative of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick only, for those were the original provinces; and since it was adopted, in 1858, Prince Edward Island and British Columbia have entered the Federation, Manitoba has been constituted, and finally Saskatchewan and Alberta have been carved out of what were the Northwest Territories. When a design emblematic of these nine provinces has been chosen by the committee and approved by the Government it will be submitted to the Royal College of Heralds in England to be registered. A royal warrant declaring it the official arms of Canada will then be issued.

Gasoline Torch to Clean Typewriter.

To give your typewriter a thorough cleaning, why not use a gasoline torch?

First take the typewriter outdoors and remove the ribbons. The platen should be either taken off or covered with paper. Having filled the torch with gasoline, pump up a good pressure and open the needle valve. A fine jet of gasoline will be projected with such force as to reach the most inaccessible parts of the machine.

One filling of the torch, if it is a good-sized one, is generally enough. After the machine has become dry, it is a good plan to spray the working parts with a good lubricating oil.

Needless to say, cleaning with a gasoline-torch should be done in the open air, and one should not smoke. —Popular Science Monthly.

The Political Hammock.

"Do you find public office an easy berth?"

"I shouldn't exactly call it a berth," said a member of Parliament thoughtfully. "It's more like a hammock; hard to get into comfortably, and still harder to get out of gracefully."

Every Wage Earner An Investor

Every wage earner can be an investor in gilt-edged securities bearing a high rate of interest without sacrifice or worry.

The plan is so simple and secure that it commends itself to everybody.

All of us spend a portion of our earnings thoughtlessly. It is human nature. Yet most of us would be glad if someone would take the money we fritter away and save it for us, because we find it difficult to save it ourselves.

Make your employer do it by means of War Savings Stamps. Say to him: "I want you to take five per cent. of the money in my pay envelope each week and buy me Thrift Stamps. Then with each $4.00 worth of Thrift Stamps buy me a War Savings Stamp. When you have bought each War Savings Stamp, put it in my envelope. Go on doing that for a year."

That is all. Your mind is free. You will not miss that 75 cents or that dollar which you have hitherto squandered on trifles.

But at the end of the year you will have a little package of War Savings Stamps, each bearing $5.00 mark, for which have cost you but a few cents over $4.00 each. These Canada will redeem in 1924.

War Savings Stamps can be bought wherever this sign is displayed.

Teachers Pay in Nova Scotia

PUBLIC interest requires that teaching should be made an attractive and honorable vocation. This can be done only by making it remunerative and desirable. It is not properly remunerative in any case, at present. In most instances, mere pittances are paid. Therefore, in some way, teachers' salaries must be increased so as to bring them into more or less accord with those enjoyed in other callings.

Unfortunately a wretchedly low standard of remuneration has been set for all instructors, in church and school or college. In consequence, the upward movement may be slow and difficult; but it must be begun at once. Our public is not otherwise unconerous. It has learned to give freely during the war; and can surely be impressed with the idea that another war must be waged in superiority—that against ignorance—if the state is finally to be "saved"; and that the necessary "salvage" must be provided, as in all wars, if victory is to be achieved. It may and should involve a degree of effort and sacrifice which can be felt; but what good is ever to be attained without such effort and sacrifice?

Therefore the people of Nova Scotia, in the main, have been letting their schools exist on the mere crumbs which fall from their tables. School rates, in the average rural section, are frequently less per annum per family than the head of that family, if only a pipe smoker, ordinarily expends on tobacco. There are municipalities in which the rate per head of the population for contributions to the foreign mission funds of a single denomination sometimes reach an amount in excess of the total annual county fund for education! Surely this is a case of supposed charity beginning very far from home! The rate assessed annually for school purposes in each county municipality was, until lately, the paltry sum of thirty cents per head of the population. It is now, we are informed, 35 cents. Can the expression to make one "look like 30 cents," that is, as mean as possible, have come from this educational assessment?

The province contributes just $60 annually towards the support of each licensed class C teacher, $90 for each C and $120 for each B; and from $150 to $180 for a few class A's, under closely restricted conditions, apart from class A's or academics, employed in County Academies and other secondary schools. The County Academies receive, under their own account, prescribed annual grants. Whatever other funds are required for the support of schools must be raised directly on the sections employing teachers. And the sections, as we have already pointed out, are in most cases so small, and the taxable property so limited, that the burden of providing greatly increased salaries would be almost unbearable.

The extent of general assistance which any section can receive varies according to the grade of teacher employed, from $60 to $90 and $120 a year, plus the county grant, averaging not more than $50 for each school, or a total, say, of from $110 to $140 and $170 per annum. Many sections have not more than a dozen rate payers; some considerably less. In addition to paying the teachers' salaries, sections have to provide school houses and maintain them. They have to furnish fuel, apparatus and insurance, and employ janitors. A percentage is allowed to the school-tax collector on the amounts collected. It will readily be seen from these facts that the possibilities of materially increasing teachers' salaries, under the present system, are limited.

Let us suppose that a section of twelve ratepayers employs a grade C teacher, who will, in most cases have a degree of scholarship and training low enough, in all conscience, and undertakes to pay a salary of $500, or a little over $40 a month, which, in all conscience, in these times—is too low—and—and yet is nearly double the usual amount paid—being less than a kitchen maid receives when board is taken into consideration. How will the ratepayers of the supposed section stand in the matter? Leaving out of account entirely all the minor charges mentioned above, which together may come to quite a sum, they will be liable for the $500 agreed to be paid. They will receive towards its payment $140 from both province and county, likely less rather than more, which will leave $360 to be levied on the twelve ratepayers, or $30 a head at least. This, be it remembered, will be for school purposes alone, and entirely apart from all municipal and other taxes, which are by no means light.

The burden of a $500-a-year salary would be almost intolerable on a section of a still less number of ratepayers, which, on account of the limited number of its children of school age, would probably receive a considerably diminished county grant.

It is perfectly obvious, therefore, that so to increase salaries in this province, as to make teaching an attractive and honorable vocation by making it remunerative and desirable, something more practicable than either pious aspirations or moral suasion is requisite. There must be radical reform of our system in at least two ways. First, the number of sections must be reduced, and those remaining made much larger. Second, the method of support must be completely reformed. It seems to us that the sections should be responsible only for buildings, their equipment and maintenance, and that the cost of salaries should be assumed either by the province or the county municipality or by the two conjointly.—Halifax Herald.

Had to Use Germans.

The half German king, George III of England, employed about 30,000 troops from thirty different German states, especially from Hesse, against the colonists, before the United States was a nation. The reason was that the war was very unpopular, few men enlisted and the Government dared not conscript Englishmen to fight their brothers in America.

CAPTURED A BATTERY YOUTH WINS THE V.C.

HOW SERGT. HERMAN J. GOOD WON THE V. C.

MERE BOY TAKES RANK WITH WAR HEROES.

He Dashed Forward Alone Killing Several Men In Charge of Machine Guns and Taking the Others Prisoner — Brave New Brunswick Soldier Was Wounded Three Times.

Sergt. Tommy Holmes Reputed to Be Youngest Soldier Wearing the Victoria Cross In This Country— Late Capt. Dobie Wrote Thrilling Account of Exploit of Owen Sound Soldier at Passchendaele.

IN the lumber, camps of New Brunswick the story of Britain's fight was told. Strong men gathered around the roaring stove in the evenings after a day in the bush, and some one from somewhere produced a newspaper, with the record of that wonderful struggle for the rights of the world in the hands of ordinary fellow fellows they were, with grizzled faces from long exposure, these men who fought all day with the giants of the primeval forest, felled huge kings of the forest, sawed and hewed them into shape for the spring freshet, when with the breaking of the ice they came down the foaming rivers to the mills. Around the big box stove they sat, heavy boots drawn off and thick socks put up to dry, and they talked of the Great War, the Great Adventure, which had called men of their race, the British race, to the help of small peoples and the crushing of brutal force by the force of a far greater force of spiritual manhood, set aflame by the God of Liberty. They read of the Angels of Mons, of family than the head of that family, if only a pipe smoker, ordinarily expends on tobacco. There are municipalities in which the rate per head of the population for contributions to the foreign mission funds of a single denomination sometimes reach an amount in excess of the total annual county fund for education! Surely this is a case of supposed charity beginning very far from home! The rate assessed annually for school purposes in each county municipality was, until lately, the paltry sum of thirty cents per head of the population. It is now, we are informed, 35 cents. Can the expression to make one "look like 30 cents," that is, as mean as possible, have come from this educational assessment?

Sergt. Good enlisted June 28, 1915, with the 55th Battalion. After a period of training in Sussex, N.B., and at Valcartier he went to England. He got to France April 12, 1916, just a year after the first heroic stand of the Canadians of which the men in the lumber camps had read and talked the spring before. Sergt. Good has been through all the fighting since, with the exception of a few months in hospital as the result of wounds received on three different occasions.

Just a month after going into the trenches, Sergt. Good received his first wound. He was in the trenches in a short time, he was again sent back, Sept., 1916, for shell shock, when he was in the hospital for six weeks. Early in 1917 he was in action and followed without any more wounds or sickness. He received his third stripe for wounds Aug. 17, 1918, when he was gassed, just eight days after he had won the Victoria Cross. He was home being built up for a month and then spending three weeks leave in Edinburgh and Glasgow, he went back to France and was there till hostilities ceased.

Sergt. Good is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Good, of Big River, N.B., about four miles from Bathurst, their nearest town. He was born on his parents' farm at Big River, and lived in that vicinity all his life until he set out for France, where he has distinguished himself so signally. Sergt. Good himself owns a farm not far from his father's. After he left school he worked on his father's farm. Then he took charge of a farm of his own, and spent his time between it and the lumber camps. On the field of battle he was made lance corporal, then corporal and after he won the V.C. he was made sergeant.

In the thick of the awful fighting of August, 1918, when the Allies were in the heat of their great advances, when they had staked their all for final victory, Sergt. Good performed the act of valor which won for him the Victoria Cross. He was no sluggard, no quitter. The Canadians were advancing in the face of awful fire. The Germans had three machine guns which were giving them trouble. Those guns were taking many good men. Sergt. Good made up his mind that that sort of thing should stop. Alone he dashed forward, killed several of the men operating the guns and made prisoners of the remainder. He took back his prisoners, but did not stay back long. Into the fight he went again, and this time he encountered a battery of big guns, guns that threw a shell more than five inches in diameter. He was alone.

Did he hesitate? Did the point blank fire of all the guns had on him frighten him? Did he run, or fall flat on the ground? This is what he did: He called to three men of the section who were near to follow him. The four of them, with Good leading, attacked the big guns, and one of the miracles of the Great War was performed. Those four men captured the whole of the gun crews of the three guns of the battery. So was the V.C. won by Sergt. Good.

From the wheat fields and logging camps of New Brunswick to the fields of France; from running the slippery rafts on the rivers of Canada, to the highest honor conferred on British soldiery for personal bravery in the Great War—this is the story of Sergt. Herman James Good, V.C. And the best of it all in this story is that the hero of it is still alive and well, and will return to Canada when the British Empire needs his services no longer in the army. — Carolyn Cornell.

It is estimated that four miles of an ordinary spider's thread would weigh scarcely a grain.

A Soldier First.

"If you don't join us we'll annihilate you." That, in effect, was what the Bolsheviks said to Col. Cecil Ward, M.P., when, in October, they marched his battalion into a Russian town. Col. Ward promptly arrested the leader, posted his men and guns, and by resolute action saved the battalion from being enveloped.

Col. Ward says he would accept command a battalion than accept a seat in the House of Lords.

THAT CHANGE IN WOMAN'S LIFE

Mrs. Godden Tells How It May be Passed in Safety and Comfort.

Fremont, O.—"I was passing through the critical period of life, being about six years of age and had all the symptoms to indicate that change—heat flashes, nervousness, and was in a general run down condition, so it was hard for me to do my work. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended to me as the best remedy for my condition, which it surely proved to be. I feel better and stronger in every way since taking it, and the annoying symptoms have disappeared." — Mrs. M. GODDEN, 925 Napoleon St., Fremont, Ohio.

Such annoying symptoms as heat flashes, nervousness, backache, headache, irritability and "the blues," may be speedily overcome and the system restored to normal conditions by the famous root and herb remedy Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If any complications exist write to themselves write the Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for suggestions how to overcome them. The result of 40 years experience is at your service and your letter held in strict confidence.

threw the bomb, there was another explosion and those of the Hun garrison that survived — nineteen in number—came out with their hands up terrified, shouting "Mercy, Kamarad" and surrendered to their youthful captor; who was standing outside the pill-box, all alone.

"By this time the company was coming forward, for the enemy resistance in that particular place had been overcome and that part of the ridge was in the hands of the Canadians—thanks to the heroism of Tommy Owen Sounder. Through the remainder of the attack he carried on in the same gallant manner, and when it was over and his recommendation for a decoration was sent in, there was not a more popular soldier in the battalion, for those who saw what he did unanimously said he deserved the honor a hundred times over."

Roddy Lemieux a Real Nationalist.

There are French-Canadians and French-Canadians. While we grow exasperated at the perversities of Bourassa and Lavergne, to whom sedition and falsehood are the only means of self-defence, let us not forget them as we read of the last moments of another French-Canadian—a mere lad. "Roddy" Lemieux, the son of that gifted man, Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, former Postmaster-General of Canada. The letter of Capt. F. Denholm describing the boy's taking off says in part, as follows:

"On Aug. 28th, Roddy went over the top, and was encouraging his men to the attack, when he was struck by a bullet in the abdomen. He never knew he was dead. 'Roddy' Lemieux, the son of that gifted man, Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, former Postmaster-General of Canada. The letter of Capt. F. Denholm describing the boy's taking off says in part, as follows:

"On Aug. 28th, Roddy went over the top, and was encouraging his men to the attack, when he was struck by a bullet in the abdomen. He never knew he was dead. 'Roddy' Lemieux, the son of that gifted man, Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, former Postmaster-General of Canada. The letter of Capt. F. Denholm describing the boy's taking off says in part, as follows:

"On the 29th the last rites of the church were administered, and his last words were 'Dites-leur que j'ai bien devoir" (tell them I did my duty). To the nurse he said: 'Give Mother my love. Tell her I have done a man's part.'"

"Roddy" Lemieux proved himself in his life and in his death a true descendant of those brave French-Canadians who courageously defended Fort Carillon, in the battle that is known as Ticonderoga; who fought on the Plains of Abraham; were honored by their foes; who later wrought valiantly under the British flag at Chateauguay. He upheld the name and honor of Quebec and of Canada as a whole. Such sacrifices as his give the fame of the French-Canadian soldier a lustre, that the gibes of so-called Nationalists cannot tarnish. Such soldiers as he, proud to do "a man's part," excitement as Major Papineau, the cousin of Bourassa, and the many other brave lads of their race who have died on the mother soil of France, are in a truer sense Nationalists than the politicians who tag themselves with that epithet. They are of the type with whom we are all anxious and glad to join hands in building up a glorious and United Canada.

Globule Magic.

By a simple lantern experiment it has been shown how a drop of water is, though one of the commonest, also one of the most marvellous and interesting things. The shape of a drop is due to the condition of the surface, which is in a state of tension, and possesses the properties of an elastic skin, like a piece of thin stretched India rubber. This was demonstrated by a thin piece of brass, eight times the weight of water, floating on the surface and stretching the "skin" downwards. Every drop would be round like a soap bubble but for own weight within this skin. To prove this, several liquids were used, "the most capricious being ordinary green syrup, which was only obtained for the lecture by dodging the controller." It was, for instance, much more difficult to prevent chloroformidine, though appearances and orthography were in its favor. Condensed milk and glycerine were also used.

The phenomena attending upon the breaking away of drops from the end of a tube in air could not be observed by the eye owing to the rapidity of the action, but by allowing the drop to form and fall in another liquid almost as dense, all the details might be observed at leisure. Thus by forming drops of orthodiuidine in water at 15 deg. C. the varying shapes assumed by the hanging drop, the drawing out of the neck before the partition, and the invariable formation of a droplet from the neck were plainly seen.

Drowned in Kingston Harbor.

A sad drowning occurred at James Swift & Company's wharf at 9.30 a.m. on Tuesday, when painters were precipitated from a scaffold on the side of the steamer St. Lawrence into the water. Two of them succeeded in getting out of the water, but the third, W. J. Quinn, sank between the rudder of the vessel and a raft moored in the corner of the wharf. H. Hart, a clerk in the office saw the men in the water and he seized a life preserver and ran out on the raft. He was about to throw the preserver into the water when the unfortunate man sank and did not rise again. The water was about ten feet deep at this point. The body was recovered after half an hour's work with poles, and the fire department was called also Dr. D. M. McCarthy. The pulmotor was used in efforts to resuscitate the drowned man, but without avail. After half an hour had elapsed, Dr. McCarthy pronounced him dead, and S. S. Corbett's ambulance was called and the body was conveyed to his undertaking parlors. The police searched the clothing, and in a pocket book was a national registration card bearing the name W. J. Quinn, Odessa. The deceased had been employed at the Locomotive Works previously.

MRS. ANNIE EMPEY CASEY widow of the late Thomas W. Casey, passed away at her home on Piety Hill, Napanee, May 19th, 1919, in her eighty-sixth year.

Mrs. Casey was born at Empey Hill, on the 29th of March, 1834. She was the second and last surviving daughter of Fletcher Empey and Charlotte Long, who both died when their family were young. The oldest, Mahala, became the wife of Thos. McGreer, and Martha, the youngest, married the late Rev. Jas. Thompson.

In 1858 Mrs. Casey married Thomas W. Casey and lived for a number of years on the homestead at Casey's Point, at the mouth of Hay Bay, from which they moved to Napanee and some years later in 1869 Mr. Casey was elected Grand Secretary of the I.O.G. Templars, the responsibility of which Mrs. Casey ably shared, while he edited the Canada Casket, and made many lecturing tours in the cause of temperance.

Mrs. Casey is survived by her son, Willet F. Casey, of Boston, Mass. ; Mrs. A. R. Davis, Toronto ; Miss Nellie, of Troy, N. Y. ; the Misses Anna and Dora, at home ; and two grand-children, Eleanor and Gordon Davis.

Mrs. Casey's paternal great grandfather belonged to the original Methodist Society formed by John Wesley in Ireland. An obituary notice of her grand-father states : "In 1788 he emigrated to the State of New York and became the means of introducing Methodism in a new settlement not far from noted Ash Grove. Afterwards he became a resident in the Township of Richmond, Upper Canada, and his dwelling soon became a preaching house, and to many the place of their conversion."

Mrs. Casey thus came naturally to her Methodist heritance and for many years her devotion to her church, and unswerving faith in the religion of her forefathers, made quite a strong influence in the religious life of her generation.

About 1872 a woman's class was formed in the Wesleyan Methodist Church, Napanee after a revival held by Dr. Meacham, and of this she was made and continued leader for over thirty years. She was also active in all other departments of the church work, where her deep spiritual life was a benefit and blessing to those who came in contact with her.

During her declining years she was relieved of all responsibility by the faithful care of her daughters, and thus was enabled to enjoy a good old age. As a friend remarked her passing was a beautiful sunset to a beautiful life.

The funeral service was conducted at her home on Thursday afternoon by Rev. Chas. DeMille, her pastor, whom she highly esteemed. The remains were afterwards interred in the Eastern cemetery.

The relations from a distance in attendence were : Mr. Willet F. Casey, Boston ; Mr. and Mrs. Allan R. Davis, and Gordon, of Toronto ; Miss Nellie Casey, of Troy ; Mr. Fletcher E. McGreer, and son Eric, of Montreal ; Major Fred Carson and Kenneth Carson, Kingston ; and Mrs. Jowett, of Trenton.

MRS. NEWHALL ON VERGE OF DESPAIR

Oshawa Woman Says She is Feeling Fine after taking Tanlac

"Tanlac was the only thing that gave me any relief, and I am convinced it is the right medicine for people in the condition I was in," said Mrs Elizabeth Newhall, of Oshawa, Ont., recently.

"I had been in a general run-down condition for over a year," she continued, "was extremely nervous, had no strength or energy, and the least little exertion would so exhaust me that I would feel real faint. I ached all over and felt half dead all the time. I had no appetite and would skip a meal after meal. Nervous blinding headaches would almost drive me distracted ; my nerves were shattered so that the least little thing would upset me and I'd get up in the morning feeling so miserable I could hardly keep on my feet.

After taking Tanlac for a few days I began to feel better. My appetite is now splendid and nothing I eat hurts me at all. Those terrible headaches are all gone, I have more life and energy, and my work is a real pleasure to me."

Tanlac is sold in Napane at WALLACE'S Drug Store, in Camden East by R. J. OSTER, in Wagarville by S. JACKSON.

INVESTING FOR CHILDREN

If heads of families drawing interest from Victory Bonds do not consider the amount large enough to invest on their own account, they might well put it into War Saving Stamps for their children.

The holder of a $100 Victory Bond receives $5.50 a year, which, if put into War Saving Stamps for a child, would mean a saving of 10 cents a week on which an amount equal to about 5 per cent simple interest is paid.

A $200 Victory Bond annually bears $11 interest which, if put into War Saving Stamps, would mean the saving of a little over 20 cents a week, drawing about 5 per cent simple interest.

A $500 Victory Bond pays $27.50 a year in interest, which, invested in War Saving Stamps, would mean the saving of 51 cents a week, or 7½ cents a day, for every day in the year, and constitutes a very considerable sum.

So if the amound paid in Victory Bond interest is too small for the parent to put into War Saving Stamps, it should at least make a fine start for a child.

SCAPA FLOW.

Known In Naval Circles as the "Last Place on Earth."

Scapa is known by navy men as "the last place on earth"—but it is really only in the midst of winter that the title is deserved. Then there are only about seven hours of daylight, and, owing to the rough seas, communication with the shore more or less ceases.

When the better weather arrives, parties are sent from the ships for recreation on the various islands. On the island of Flotta, the officers and men of the Grand Fleet have made a first-rate golf-course of eighteen holes, and this is the chief attraction of Scapa. This island also has several football and hockey grounds.

Several ships have cultivated plots of land on the island of Fara, and have quite useful vegetable gardens. Unfortunately, however, the ship sometimes leaves the anchorage port just when its best produce is waiting to be gathered, and on its return is perhaps nicely ready for next year's seed.

In the early days of the war men were much inconvenienced by having nowhere to go, but in 1915 the steamship Borodino was chartered by the Junior Army and Navy Stores, who started a floating branch of their establishment at Scapa. This ship indeed came as a blessing to the fleet, for she contained a laundry and a hairdressing saloon, and in the shop were to be purchased all manner of articles and luxuries which help to comfort those who "go down to the sea in ships."

The after-hold of the steamship Gourko, a provision-ship and sister of the Borodino, was early in 1916 turned into a theatre, so that while in the daytime the Gourko carried on provisioning the fleet, at night she was able to lay alongside any warship requiring accommodation for a concert.

Our surgeons will always have a good word for Scapa; its air is most bracing, and with the climate slightly warmed by the Gulf Stream, it might almost be called a health resort.

Bulldog Beatty.

"Early in everything." That is the motto of Admiral Beatty, Britain's naval hero. In the service he is known as "Bulldog Beatty," by reason of the tenacity with which he fastens on to any job he is called upon to tackle.

The navy swears by him, and he is proud of his men. After Jutland the Huns boasted of the destruction of his ships. Beatty simply replied: "The battle-cruiser fleet is alive and has a very big kick in her." Fortunately for them, the Huns did not wait for the kick.

Beatty's naval record is amazing. He was a commander at 27, a captain at 29, and rear admiral at 38—the youngest on record. Nelson was a year older when he was promoted rear admiral.

MORE ABOUT THE NET ACROSS THE CHANNEL

25,000 Miles of Steel Wire in Floating Gate that Barred Subs' Entrance.

When two years ago, Germany announced her "unrestricted" submarine warfare, many nervous folks threw up their hands, and asserted that we should never be able to devise any effective means of combatting the new peril. But the silent navy was not worried. It smiled a silent smile, supremely confident that the path that led to security would presently be discovered—which, as the world knows, it was.

The navy knew what the nervous folk did not know. It knew that a grave and tremendous submarine peril had been conquered during the early days of the war, the secret of which was as well kept as its plans were laid. And the secret was the secret of the great net defence, which now that naval censors are non-existant, may be described.

Early in 1915 the British Navy accomplished one of the cleverest maratime feats of the whole war. At that time our cross channel transport was enormous. It was, moreover, increasing every day, for as our engagements increased in France and Flanders, so our army increased at home, and had to be conveyed across the narrow strip of water wherein so many forms of death might lurk.

No less than one hundred destroyers were employed on escort duty in connection with this arduous task of transport. It was a wasteful business, wasteful and vulnerable.

Birth of the Net.

The wonderful flow of troops and supplies across the channel could not have been effected if the old cumbersome system had not been superseded by something better. It was made possibly the Consumation of one of the greatest strategic manuvers ever applied. That was the secret making and laying of the great net barrier.

It was a gigantic undertaking. Such a net had never been made or conceived before. It involved the employment of more than 3,000 men and boys—all naval—in various towns on the east coast for the mammoth net was made in sections.

When one realizes how many people knew of this secret, it seems remarkable that it did not leak out. Even the wives of the workers knew it not—or if they did, they proved that they, like their husbands, could keep a secret.

Here are some of the items in the construction of the net: there were twenty-five thousand miles of steel wire of various thicknesses. There were two hundred and fifty thousand galvanized steel connection blocks. A million screws were used to fasten and secure the net, to which may be added two hundred and fifty thousand glass buoys, besides a similar number of globe nets, hemp, and ten thousand T. N. T. mines.

The net itself consists of a tremendously strong system of interknit meshes of re-inforced steel wire. Three different sized meshes were used. The glass globes and globe nets were used to keep the net in position in the water. The globes, serving as buoys, were fixed inside the nets while the deadly T. N. T. mines were strung out in the net itself in a great diamond pattern.

An Impassible Barrier

The whole contrivance, presented an impassible barrier to

LIFT CORNS OR CALLUSES OFF

Doesn't hurt! Lift any corn or callus off with fingers

Don't suffer! A tiny bottle of Freezone costs but a few cents at any drug store. Apply a few drops on the corns, calluses and "hard skin" on bottom of feet, then lift them off. ●

When Freezone removes corns from the toes or calluses from the bottom of feet, the skin beneath is left pink and healthy and never sore, tender or irritated.

Fritz and his torpedoes.

And how long, after the several parts were completed, did it take to lower the gigantic net into the sea, and to stretch, adjust and fix it between Folkestone and Boulogne? The thing was done between the setting and the rising of the sun!

After months of feverish knotting and splicing, the trawlers set out from Folkestone, unloading their unique cargo as they went. Literally they drew a line of safety across the water. By morning the net was making sheer into Boulogne harbor and the absolute safety of our cross-channel transport was secured.

So the net was laid and behind that steel rampart the ships of old Britain could come and go as they listed. Fritz could fire off as many of his tin fish as he pleased They did no more than dinge up in the net, gifts to his Britanic Majesty, when, as occasions arose various sections of the net were raised for inspection.

This was practically an isnus, transforming England from an isfand into a peninsula. This, at all events, was the effect of the net on German boats. Before the barrier was set, German submarines, working from their base, could dash for our Channel transport by a very short cut, but admittedly not without some danger to themselves. They could descend swiftly upon us from the north east.

Was Long Way Round

But just take a map of western Europe and notice what a difference that barrier made to the U-boat commander's plans! In order to steer a course sheer around the British Isles, and come up the channel from the west to his destination, where he would arrive with empty fuel tanks. For the German submarines in those days were not the enormously powerful "long range" boats of to-day. They had very definite limits.

Passage through the net was only possible at Folkestone and Boulogne. We should have been hoist with our own petard had we left no opening for ourselves. But the available channel or gates at either end were narrow and vessels had to pass through in single file, close inshore, where they were under the comfortable menace of shore batteries.

Of the floating barrier it has been said that "what Britain lacked in troopships was more than atoned for by the cross channel net defence. Day and night it was constantly patrolled by trawlers. It required a certain amount of attention and watching—as for instance, when a now and again became necessary to replace sections of the net after one of the mines had justified its existence.

It did not merely protect, that patient, unseen net; it could bite. Fourteen ocean highwaymen, either by accident or design, tried conclusions with her. She accounted for them all.

These like many another, are encounters which will never be described in history, and which will dwell only in the imagination of men.

Liverpool Cathedral.

Liverpool Cathedral has found another generous patron in Mr. John Rankin, the shipowner. At a centenary commemoration of his family's link with the northern port, Mr. Rankin is giving £20,000 to build the main entrance, after Gilbert Scott's design.

When this is done the work will add a new dignity to a building whose dimensions are on a scale of magnificence — for the transepts, of 140 feet, are much higher than those of any English cathedral, while the length of nave, 240 feet, is only 22 feet short of the giant York Minster.

A Translation.

Some one who was at work on a Christian hymnal for the Zulus was unable to proceed with the line, "Lord dismiss us with Thy blessing," because the language has no equivalent either for "dismiss" or "blessing." The nearest he could get was, "Kick us out softly."

THE CRICKET

And again last week the Enterprise oracle spake. Perhaps by now he has crawled back into his hole with withdrawn horns. He must feel very proud of himself, indeed. The throng of supporters who prompted his writings, are so much in evidence, too, giving him a helping hand. It is not counted the right thing to call people names in print, so we restrain our hand from writing those words which would fit him so well. We are very much afraid that in attacking the question of memorials, that Mr. Vannest has struck a very lonely job. The county is fairly quivering with hot comment on Mr. Vannest's letters, and not one voice of agreement have we heard to his sayings. It disgusts us to hear him say that "we have enough to pay." What a miserable amount any money he may have paid for the war would sum to the amount he would have had to pay had Germany won. It seems too bad that some people aren't in Germany where they HAVE TO PAY, and not voluntarily. It seems that to say anything further in this matter is only to waste our precious moments.

• • • • •

It's an ill wind that blows no one good luck. If you won't take our word, ask the lighthouse keepers. Last Monday night's storm and deluge caused a "wash out" on the Grand Trunk lines between here and Kingston. There was as a result of this a wreck, and Tuesday morning about three hundred hungry travellers appeared in the town to be fed. And still we kick about the rain!

• • • • •

During this week we were invited by a motion picture house to go and see ourselves as others see us. We wonder if the man who took those pictures ever had that opportunity. If so it ought to keep him smiling for many moons to come.

• • • • •

Who is going to be one of the delegates to interview the County Council to oppose the memorial question? Please send in your name in early as we would like to have your obituary ready.

• • • • •

If Mr. Vannest still thinks there is enough to pay—and says so,we fear that one day he will think the "dues" is to pay. For as sure as guns are guns some care free soldier is going to go some day to see that blind minded patriot. The soldiers are, and rightly, the most offended of any by the ignorant remarks of W. H. Vannest.

• • • • •

The much mentioned person must feel greatly flattered to appear so frequently in print. Print's alright as long as it's not a casualty list.

• • • • •

We take great pleasure in recording a fine day this week.

• • • • •

However, we shouldn't kick. If we voice any, then its up to nature to even things up.

• • • • •

Things, by the way, have been quite calm and quiet around the liquor license commission lately, it seems.

• • • • •

Hardly a day passes but we hear some complaint about the roads. On the far-famed Hamburgh road this week a milk waggon got stuck with his load. Three teams were brought to the scene to pull him. It proved a poor job and the wagon and load were upset, spilling the milk over the road, and damaging his wagon. It seems hardly fair that in a free country men should have to suffer like this. It is a shame that the state of the roads isn't remedied more speedily.

The Boy Scouts from this town attended the scout meeting at Toronto this week, at which General Sir Robert Baden-Powell, the Chief Scout, and organizer of the Boy Scout movement, and hero of Mafeking, presented the "Bronze Medal" to Mr. and Mrs. Frank Ford for the bravery of their son, who lost his life in an endeavor to save two others.

We suppose there are people who say to Hawker, "I suppose you are glad to be back." Boys who have been in war's inferno for years come back to quiet, peace and home and say that question is the most often asked of any.

A Delicate Point.

The following letter was written by the wife of a man fighting overseas to a member of the Salvage Club, an official organization for preventing war waste:

"Dear Sir,—I called at your office on Wednesday at one o'clock, but was told you were engaged on Salvage, and that I could not see you. I wanted to ask you about Bert's teeth what he lost at the front in the mud—do I still have to keep up the payments of them on the installment plan? I feel quite sure that your Salvage Club what they talks about would have the matter put right if you would only mention it. Yours respectfully ——."

The Other Fellow.

"I'd buy a car if it weren't for one thing." "What is that?" "Having to look out for the other fellow." "But if you had a car the other fellow would have to look out for you also." "Gee! I never thought of that! I'll buy one."

Dorothy Was Puzzled.

"Mamma, have I any children?" asked six-year-old Dorothy. "Of course not, dear. What do you mean?" "Well, the preacher spoke in church this morning about children's children, and I wondered if I had any."

SAYS LEMON JUICE WILL REMOVE FRECKLES

Girls! Make this cheap beauty lotion to clear and whiten your skin.

Squeeze the juice of two lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of orchard white, shake well, and you have a quarter pint of the best freckle and complexion whitener in print—so very, very small cost.

Your grocer has the lemons and any drug store or toilet counter will supply three ounces of orchard white for a few cents. Massage this sweetly fragrant lotion into the face, neck, arms and hands each day and see how freckles and blemishes disappear and how clear, soft and white the skin becomes. Yes! It is harmless.

New British Gun.

Experiments which have been taking place in connection with a new British field gun have now resulted in the evolution of a weapon which is considered to be the best of its kind in the world.

The advantages of the new gun are that it will fire the heavy 18¼-lb. shell used in the ordinary quick-firer a further distance and with greater rapidity than has even been attained with a field-gun before.

In fact the new gun increases the range of the British normal field weapon by at least 3,000 yards, and it is expected that further developments will extend the vulnerable point by another 1,000 yards.

Experiments have shown that the new gun can discharge as many as 28 rounds a minute.

One of the difficulties at first experienced was that, although the increased distance could be attained with comparative ease, accuracy could not be wholly relied upon at the lengthened range, and although the gun was used on a limited scale during the closing stages of the war, its far-reaching effects were not utilized to their full extent for this reason.

The vibration set up by the extreme rapidity of fire also operated somewhat against accuracy, but it is understood that both these difficulties have now been overcome, and that the gun has been found to answer all requirements.

—o—

German Guns.

A writer in an English paper gracefully describing the presentation of a couple of German guns to a certain town, dwells picturesquely enough, on their introduction to a couple of older guns, from one of the old French wars, standing by the doors of the town hall. These guns, he writes, were probably fired last in 1708, and then, dropping like Mr. Wegg into history, he speaks of them as Turenne's guns. Well, in 1708 "Marlbrook" fought the battle of Oudenarde, so that if the guns were taken then they must have been Vendome's guns. Of course, they might have been in 1675, at Sassbach. A fact which makes the supposition mildly improbable.

Curing Influenza.

A doctor was called to attend an Irishman and his wife. Both were suffering with severe colds, and, fearing they would develop influenza, the medical man ordered "two grains of quinine and a swallow of whisky every three hours." Calling the next day, he found the man up and about, but the wife was still in bed. "Did you follow my instructions?" said the doctor. "To the letter, sorr!" replied the husband. "How much quinine have you left?" Sure, Ol t'ink she have taken the whole av it!" said the Irishman. "And did you take it, too?" he was asked. "Divir a bit!" was the reply. "Begorra, it kept me busy takin' the whisky every toime she took a pill, an' sure she's in bed an' Oi'm up!"

Cap'n Warren's Wards

by JOSEPH C. LINCOLN

Copyright, 1911, by D. Appleton & Co.

Pearson began to get a clew to the situation.

"Captain Warren," he demanded, "have you—do you mean to say you've taken this room to live in?"

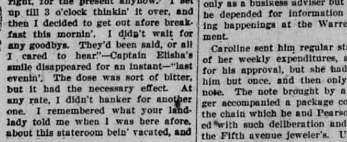
"No, I ain't said all that yet. I wanted to talk with you a little afore I said it. But that was my idea if you and I agreed on sartin matters."

"You've come here to live! You've left your—your niece's house?"

"Ya-as, I've left—that is, I left the way the Irishman left the stable where they kept the mule. He said there was all outdoors in front of him and only two feet behind. That's about the way I was with me."

"Have your nephew and niece"—

"Um-hm! They hinted that my room was better than my company, and, take it by and large, I guess they was right, for the present anyhow. I set up till 3 o'clock thinkin' it over, and then I decided to get out afore breakfast this mornin'. I didn't wait for any goodbys. They'd been said, or all I cared to hear"—Captain Elisha's smile disappeared for an instant—"least evenin'. The dose was sort of bitter, but it had the necessary effect. At any rate, I didn't hanker for another one. I remembered what your landlady told me when I was here afore, about this stateroom bein' vacated, and



"It wasn't your fault," he said.

I come down to look at it. It suits me well enough. Seems like a decent moorin's for an old salt water derelict like me. The price is reasonable, and I guess likely I'll take it. I guess I will."

"Why do you guess? By George, I hope you will!"

"Do you? I'm much obliged. I didn't know but after last night, after the scrape I got you into, you might feel—well, sort of as if you'd seen enough of me."

The young man smiled bitterly. "It wasn't your fault," he said. "It was mine entirely. I'm quite old enough to decide matters for myself, and I should have decided as my reason and not my inclinations told me. You weren't to blame."

"Yes, I was. If you're old enough I'm too old, I calkate. But I did think—however, there's no use goin' over that. I don't want you to think that I've hove overboard that 'responsibility' I was so easy and fresh about takin' on my shoulders. It's there yet, and I'll see you squared with Caroline afore this v'yage is over if I live."

His friend frowned.

"You needn't mind," he said. "I prefer that you drop the whole miserable business."

"Well, maybe. But, Jim, you've taken hold of these electric batteries that doctors have sometimes? It's awful easy to grab the handles of one of those contraptions, but when you want to drop 'em you can't. They don't drop easy. I took hold of the handles of Bije's affairs, and though it might be pleasanter to drop 'em I can't—or I won't."

"Then you're leaving your nephew and niece doesn't mean that you've given up the guardianship?"

Captain Elisha's jaw set squarely.

"I don't remember sayin' that it did," he answered, with decision. Then, his good nature returning, he added: "Well, Jim, there's just one thing more. Have I disgraced you a good deal bein' around with you and chummin' in with you the way I have? That is, do you think I've disgraced you? Are you ashamed of me?"

"I? Ashamed of you? You're joking!"

"No, I'm serious. Understand now, I'm not apologizin'. My ways are my ways, and I think they're just as good as the next feller's, whether he's from South Denboro or—well, Broad street. I've got a habit of thinkin' for myself and actin' for myself, and when I take off my hat it's to a bigger man than I am and not to a more stylish hat. But since I've lived here in New York I've learned that, with a whole lot of folks, hats themselves count more than what's underneath 'em. I haven't changed mine, and I ain't goin' to. Now, with that plain and understood do you want me to live here in the same house with you? I ain't fishin' for compliments. I want an honest answer."

He got it. Pearson looked him squarely in the eye.

"I do," he said. "I like you, and I don't care a blank about your hat. Is that plain?"

Captain Elisha's reply was delivered over the balusters in the hall.

"Hi!" he called. "Hi, Mrs. Hepton."

The landlady had been anxiously waiting. She ran from the dining room to the foot of the stairs.

"Yes?" she cried. "What is it?"

"It's a bargain," said the captain. "I'm ready to engage passage."

CHAPTER XIII.

A Rock or a Lighthouse.

THUS Captain Elisha entered another of New York's "circles," that which centered at Mrs. Hepton's boarding house. Within a week he was as much a part of it as if he had lived there for years. At lunch, on the day of his arrival, he made his appearance at the table in company with Pearson, and when the landlady eventually announced that he was to be "one of our little party" thereafter he received and replied to the welcoming salutations of his fellow boarders with unruffled serenity.

The captain paid frequent visits to the offices of Sylvester, Kuhn & Graves in Pine street. Upon the senior partner, whom he esteemed and trusted not only as a business adviser but a friend, he depended for information concerning happenings at the Warren apartment.

Caroline sent him regular statements of her weekly expenditures, also bills for his approval, but she had written him but once, and then only a brief note. The note brought by a messenger accompanied a package containing the chain which he and Pearson selected with such deliberation and care at the Fifth avenue jeweler's. Under the existing circumstances, the girl wrote, she felt that she did not wish to accept presents from him and therefore returned this one.

After Pearson had departed one morning Captain Elisha put on his hat and coat and started for his lawyer's office. Sylvester was glad to see him and invited him to lunch.

"No, thank you," replied the captain. "I just run down to ask if there was anything new in the offin'. Last time I see you, you hinted you and your mates had sighted somethin' or other through the fog, and it might turn out to be a rock or a lighthouse, you couldn't tell which. Made up your mind yet?"

Sylvester shook his head. "No," he said slowly, "it is still foggy. We're busy investigating, but we're not ready to report."

"Humph! Well, what's the thing look like? You must be a little nighter to it by now."

The lawyer tapped his desk with a pencil. "I don't know what it looks like," he answered. "That is to say, I don't—I can't believe it is what it appears at this distance to be. If it is it is the most"—

He paused. Captain Elisha waited for him to go on and when he did so asked another question.

"The most what?" he demanded. "Is it likely to be very bad? Ain't discovered any more of those Cut Short bonds, have you?"

The bonds to which he referred were those of a defunct Short Line railroad a large number of which Pearson had been discovered among A. Rodgers Warren's effects. Part of his "tangled assets," the captain had termed them, differentiating from the "tangible" variety.

"Abbie, my housekeeper, has been writin' me," he went on, "about havin' the sewin' room papered. She wants a Sairdrice conception in the style of paper. Says it ought to be pretty and out of the common, but not too expensive. I judge what she wants is somethin' that looks like money but ain't really worth much. Got any cents a mile I've been thinkin' I'd send her a box or so of those bonds. They'd fill the bill in those respects, wouldn't they?"

Sylvester laughed. "They certainly would, Captain," he replied. "No, we haven't unearthed any more of that sort. And, as for this mystery of ours, I'll give you the answer, if it's worth anything at all, in a very short time. Meanwhile you go home and forget it."

"Well, I'll try. But I guess it sticks out on my face like a four days' toothache. But I won't worry about that. You know best what you'd ought to tell me now or not, and—well, I'm carryin' about all the worry my tonnage'll stand as 'tis."

He drew a long breath. Sylvester regarded him sympathetically.

"You mustn't take your nephew's and niece's treatment too much to heart," he said.

"Oh, I don't—that is, I pretend I don't. And I do try not to. But I keep thinkin' and wonderin' if 'twould have been better if I hadn't gone there to live at all. Hi hum! A man of my age hadn't ought to mind what a twenty-year-old girl says or does, specially when her kind, advisin' friends have shown her how she's been deceived and hypocritted. By the way, speakin' of hypocrites, I suppose there's just as much 'Dunnin'' as ever goin' on up there."

"Yes; a little more, if anything, I'm afraid. Your niece and Mrs. Dunn and her precious son are together now so constantly that people are expecting—well, you know what they expect."

"I can guess. I hope they'll be disappointed."

"So do I, but I must confess I'm fearful. Malcolm himself isn't so wise, but his mother is"—

"A whole book of Proverbs, hey? I know. She's an able old frigate, I did think I had her guns spiked, but she turned 'em on me unexpected. I thought I had her and her boy in a clove hitch. I knew somethin' that I was sartin sure they wouldn't want Caroline to know, and she and Malcolm knew I knew it. Her tellin' Caroline of it, her story of it, when I wasn't there to contradict, was as smart a piece of maneuverin' as ever was. It took the wind out of my sails, because, though I'm just as right as I ever was, Caroline wouldn't listen to me nor believe me now."

"She'll learn by experience."

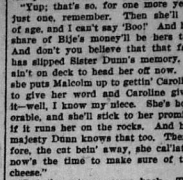
"I don't mind so much. Caroline's bein' down on me," resumed the captain. "She'll know better some day, I hope, and if she don't—well, I'm only a side issue in her life, anyhow, bein' in by accident, like the section of dog collar in the sausage. But I do hope her learnin' by experience won't come too late to save her from what she'll be awful sorry for by and by."

"It must," declared the lawyer, with decision. "You must see to it, Captain Warren. You are her guardian. She is absolutely under your charge. She can do nothing of importance unless you consent."

"Yup; that's so, for one more year, just one, remember. Then she'll be of age, and I can't say 'Boo!' And her share of Bije's money'll be hers, too. And don't you believe that that fact has slipped Sister Dunn's memory, I ain't on deck to head her off now. If she puts Malcolm up to gettin' Caroline to give her word and Caroline gives it—well, I know my niece. She's honorable, and she'll stick to her promise if it runs her on the rocks. And her majesty Dunn knows that too. There, there, I'm off on a cruise, I'm afraid, now's the time to make sure of the cheese."

"But the cat can come back. The song says it did, you know."

"Um-hm! And got another kick, I shouldn't wonder! However, my claws'll stay sharp for a year or there-



"The cat being away, she callates now's the time to be sure of the cheese."

abouts, and if it comes to a shindy there'll be some tall scratchin' afore I climb a tree. Keep a weather eye on what goes on, won't you?"

"I will. You can depend on me."

"I do. And, say, for goodness' sakes, put me out of my misery regardin' that rock or lighthouse on Bije's chart soon's ever you settle which it is?"

"Certainly! And, remember, don't worry. It may be a lighthouse or nothing at all. At all events, I'll report very soon."

But in spite of his promise Sylvester did not report during the following week or the next. Meanwhile his client tried his best to keep the new mystery from troubling his thoughts and succeeded only partially. The captain's days and evenings were quiet and monotonous. He borrowed a book or two from Mrs. Hepton's meager library, read, walked a good deal, generally along the water front, and wrote daily letters to Abner Baker. He and Pearson were together for at least a portion of each day. The author, fighting down his dejection and discouragement, set himself resolutely to work once more on the novel, and his nautical adviser was called in for frequent consultation. The story, however, progressed but slowly. There was something lacking. Each knew what that something was, but neither named it.

One evening Pearson entered the room tenanted by his friend to find the latter seated beside the table, his shoes partially unlaced and a pair of big slippers ready for putting on.

"Captain," said the visitor, "you look so comfortable I hate to disturb you."

Captain Elisha, red faced and panting, desisted from the unlacing and straightened in his chair.

"Whew!" he puffed. "Jim, your remarks prove that your experience of the world ain't as big as it ought to be. When you get to my age and waist measure you'll realize that stoopin' over and comfort don't go together. I hope to be comfortable pretty soon, but I shan't be till them boots are off. Set down. The agony'll be over in a minute."

Pearson declined to sit. "Not yet," he said. "And you let those shoes alone until you hear what I've got to say. A newspaper friend of mine has sent me two tickets for the opera tonight. I want you to go with me."

Captain Elisha was surprised.

"To the opera?" he repeated. "Why, that's a—a sort of singin' theater, ain't it?"

"Yes. You're fond of music; you told me so. And 'Aida' is beautiful. Come on. It will do us both good."

"Hum! Well, I don't know."

"I do. Get ready."

The captain looked at his caller's evening clothes.

"What do you mean by gettin' ready?" he asked. "You've got on your regimentals, open front and all. My uniform is the landlady's new kind; fits in better with church sociables and South Denboro no'theasters. If I wore one of those vests like yours Abbie'd make me put on a red flannel lung protector to keep fro a catchin' pneumonia. And she'd think 'twas sinful waste besides, runnin' the risk of spillin' a clean bilged shirt so quick. Won't I look like an undertaker sittin' alongside of you?"

"Not a bit. It will ease your mind I'll change to a business suit."

"I don't care. You know how I feel. We had a little talk about hats a spell ago, you remember. If you're willin' to take me 'just as I am, without a plea,' as the hymn tune says, why, I callate I'll say 'yes' and go. Set down and wait while I get on my ceremonials."

The pair walked over to Broadway, boarded a street car and alighted before the Metropolitan Opera House. Pearson's seats were good ones, well down in the orchestra. Captain Elisha turned and surveyed the great interior and the brilliantly garbed audience.

ECZEMA SOOTHED AND RELIEVED

A Powerful Remedy For This Distressing Complaint

WARREN, Ont.

"I had an attack of Weeping Eczema; so bad that my clothes would be wet through at times.

For four months I suffered terribly. I could get no relief until I tried 'Fruit-a-tives' and 'Soothe Salva' The first treatment gave me relief.

Altogether, I have used three boxes of 'Soothe Salva' and two of 'Fruit-a-tives', and am entirely well"

G. W. HALL.

Both these sterling remedies are sold by dealers at 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

"Fruit-a-tives" is also put up in a trial size which sells for 25c.

Pearson bought a copy of the libretto, and the captain followed the performance with interest.

"Say, Jim," he whispered, with a broad grin, "it's a good thing this opera idea ain't carried into real life. If you had to sing every word you said 'twould be sort of distressin', specially if you was in a hurry. A feller like solo when you was orderin' the crew to shorten sail would be a high old brimstone anthem, I'll bet you."

The foyer had its usual animated crowd, and among them Pearson recognized a critic of his acquaintance. He offered to introduce the captain, but the latter declined the honor, saying that he "calkated" he wouldn't shove his bows in this time. "You heave ahead and see your friend, Jim," he added. "I'll come to anchor by this pillar and watch the fleet go by. I'll have to write Abbie about all this. She'll want to know how the female craft was rigged."

Left alone, he leaned against the pillar and watched the people pass and repass just behind him. Two young men passed just behind him. He could not help overhearing their conversation.

"I presume you've heard the news?" asked one casually.

"Yes," replied the other, "I have—that is, if you mean the news concerning Mal Dunn. The mater learned it this afternoon and sprang it at dinner. No one was greatly surprised. Formal announcement made and all that sort of thing, I believe. Mal's to be congratulated."

"His mother is, you mean. She managed the campaign. The old lady is some strategist, and I'd back her to win under ordinary circumstances. But I understand these were not ordinary; wise owl of a guardian to be circumvented or something of that sort."

"From what I hear the Dunns haven't won so much after all. There was a big shrinkage when papa died, so they say. Instead of three or four millions it panned out to be a good deal less than one. I don't know much about it because our family and theirs have drifted apart since they moved."

"Humph! I imagine whatever the panout it will be welcome. The Dunns are dangerously close to the ragged edge; everybody has been 'into them' for years. And it takes a few ducats to keep Mal going. He's no Uncle Russell when it comes to putting by for the rainy day."

"Well, on the whole, I'm rather sorry for the other party. Mal is a good enough fellow and he certainly is a game sport, but"—

They moved on and Captain Elisha heard no more. But what he had heard was quite sufficient. He sat through the remainder of the opera in silence and answered all his friend's questions and remarks curtly and absently.

When they stopped into the trolley Pearson bought an evening paper, not the Planet, but a dignified sheet which shunned sensationalism and devoted much space to the doings of the safe, sane and ultra respectable element. Perceiving that his companion for some reason did not care to talk, he read as the car bore downtown. Suddenly Captain Elisha was awakened from his reverie by hearing his friend utter an exclamation. Looking up, the captain saw that he was leaning back in the car, the paper lying unheeded in his lap.

"What's the matter?" asked the older man anxiously.

Pearson started, glanced quickly at his friend, hesitated, and looked down again.

"There it is," he said. "Read it."

Captain Elisha took the paper, drew his spectacle case from his pocket, adjusted his glasses and read. The item was among those under the head of "Personal and Social." It was what he expected. "The engagement is today announced of Miss Caroline Warren, daughter of the late A. Rodgers Warren, the well known broker, to Mr. Malcolm Corcoran Dunn of Fifth avenue.

SHILOH quickly stops coughs, cures colds, and heals the throat and lungs. 25 cents.

Miss Warren, it will be remembered, was one of the most charming of the season before last's debutantes and"—

The captain read the brief item through.

"Yes," he said slowly, "I see."

Pearson looked at him in amazement.

"Are you going to permit her to marry that—that fellow?"

"Well, I ain't sartin that I can stop her."

"My God, man! Do you realize—and she—your niece—why"—

"There, there, Jim! I realize it all, I cal-late. It's my business to realize it."

"And it isn't mine. No, of course, it isn't. You're right there."

"Hold on!" commanded the captain. "Hold on, Jim! Don't you go off ha't cocked. When I said 'twas my business to realize this thing I meant just that and nothin' more. I wa'n't hintin', and you ought to know it. You do know it, don't you?"

The young man paused. "Yes," he answered, after an instant's struggle with his feelings, "yes, I do. I beg your pardon, captain."

"Sort of knocked you on your beam ends, I understand. Well, Jim," with relish, "I ain't exactly on an even keel myself."

CHAPTER XIV.

"Now We're Comin' to the Rock."

NINE o'clock is an early hour for a New York lawyer's convenience to be at his place of business. Yet when Captain Elisha asked a office boy of Sylvester, Kuhn & Graves if the senior partner was in he received an affirmative answer. Sylvester welcomed him gravely.

He pushed an electric button on his desk. The office boy answered the ring.

"Have Mr. Kuhn and Mr. Graves arrived?" asked the lawyer.

"Yes, sir; both of them, sir."

"Tell them Captain Warren is here, and ask them to join us in the inner room. Remind Mr. Graves to bring the papers. And, Tim, remember that we're not to be disturbed. Do you understand?"

"Yes, sir," said Tim and departed.

Captain Elisha regarded his friend with some dismay.

"Say," he exclaimed, "this must be serious if it takes the skipper and both mates to handle it!"

Sylvester did not smile. "It is," he answered. "Come!"

He led the way into the room opening from the rear of his own. It was a large apartment with a long table in the center. Mr. Kuhn, brisk and businesslike, was already there. He shook hands with his client. As he did so Graves, dignified and precise as ever, entered, carrying a small portfolio filled with papers.

The four took chairs at the table. Graves untied and opened the portfolio. Captain Elisha looked at his solemn companions, and his lips twitched.

Sylvester took a card from his pocket and referred to a penciled memorandum on its back.

"Captain Warren," he began slowly, "as you know, and as directed by you, my partners here and I have been engaged for months in carefully going over your brother's effects, estimating values, tabulating and sorting his various properties and securities, separating the good from the worthless, and those we are not sure at a glance, a surprising amount of the latter"—

"Um-hm," interrupted the captain, "cut short bonds and the like of that, I know. Excuse me. Go on."

"Yes. Precisely. And there were many just as valueless. But we have been gradually getting those out of the way and listing and appraising the remainder. It was a tangle. Your brother's business methods, especially of late years, were decidedly unsystematic and slipshod. It may have been the condition of his health which prevented his attending to them as he should. At any rate, he was slightly, it may have been that he was secretly in great trouble and mental distress. At all events, the task has been a hard one for us, largely owing to Graves and his patient work, and our report was practically ready a month ago."

He paused. Captain Elisha, who had been listening intently, nodded.

"Yes," he said; "you told me 'twas. What does the whole thing tot up to? What's the final figger, Mr. Graves?"

"Never mind them now, Graves," interrupted Kuhn. "The amount, roughly speaking, is close to over our original estimate, half a million."

The captain drew a breath of relief. "Then we're all right then, ain't we? If the estate is worth half a million what's the matter with it?"

"That is what we are here this morning to discuss, captain. A month ago, as I said, we considered our report practically ready. Then we suddenly happened on the trail of something which upon investigation upset all our calculations. If true it threatened, not to abolish the half million of the estate, to prove so distressing and painful to us, Rodgers Warren's friends and legal advisers, that we decided not to alarm you, his brother, by discussing our suspicions until we were sure there was no mistake. I did drop you a hint, you will remember"—

"I remember. Now we're comin' to the rock."

Sylvester was evidently disturbed. Captain Elisha, regarding him intently, nodded.

"I judge it's sort of hard for you to go on, Mr. Sylvester," he said. "I'll help you all I can. You and Mr. Kuhn and Mr. Graves here have found out somethin' that ain't exactly straight in Bije's doin's—somethin's he's done that's—well, to speak plain, that's crooked?"

"I'm afraid there's no doubt of it."

"Humph!" The captain frowned. His cigar had gone out, and he idly twisted the stump between his fingers. "Well," he said, with a sigh, "our family, gen'rally speakin', has always held its head pretty high. Dad was poor, but he prided himself on bein' straight as a plumb line. And, as for mother, she"— * * * Then, looking up quickly, he asked, "Does anybody outside know about this?"

"No one but ourselves—"

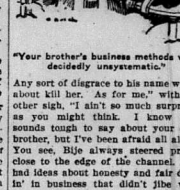
"Yet? Is it going to be necessary for anybody else to know it?"

"We hope not. But there is a possibility."

"I was thinkin' about the children."

"Of course. So are we all."

"Um-hm. Poor Caroline! She put her father on a sort of altar and bowed down afore him, as you might say.



"Your brother's business methods were decidedly unsystematic."

Any sort of disgrace to his name would about kill her. As for me," with another sigh, "I ain't so much surprised as you might think. I know that sounds tough to say about your own brother, but I've been afraid all along. You see, Bije always steered pretty close to the edge of the channel. He had ideas about honesty and 'fair dealin' in business that didn't jibe with mine. We split on just that, as I told you, Mr. Graves, when you and I first met. He got some South Denboro folks to invest money along with him—sort of savin's account, they figgered it—but I found out he was usin' it to speculate with. So that's why we had our row. I took pains to see that the money was paid back, but he and I never spoke afterward. Far as my own money was concerned, I hadn't any kick, but— * * * However, I'm talkin' too much. Go on, Sylvester, I'm ready to hear whatever you've got to say."

"Thank you, captain. You make it easier for me. It seems that your brother's first step toward wealth and success was taken about nineteen years ago. Then somehow or other, probably through a combination of luck and shrewdness, he obtained a grant, a concession from the Brazilian government, the long term lease of a good sized tract of land on the upper Amason. It was very valuable because of its rubber trees."

"Hey?" Captain Elisha leaned forward. "Say that again!" he commanded sharply.

Sylvester repeated his statement. "He got the concession by paying $20,000 to the government of Brazil," he continued. "To raise the $20,000 he formed a stock company of 250 shares at $100 each. One hundred of these shares were in his own name. Fifty were in the name of one Thomas A. Craven, a clerk at that time in his office. Craven was only a dummy, however. Do you understand what I mean by a dummy?"

"I can guess. Sort of a wooden image that moved when Bije pulled the strings. Yes, yes, I understand well enough. Go ahead, go ahead!"

"That's it. The fifty shares were in Craven's name, but they were transferred in blank and in Mr. Warren's safe. Together with his own hundred they gave him control and a voting majority. That much we know by the records."

"I see. But this rubber con—contraption wa'n't really worth anything, was it?"

"Worth anything! Captain Warren, I give you my word that it was worth more than all the rest of the investments that your brother made during his lifetime."

"Eh?" The exclamation was almost a shout.

"Why, yes, decidedly more. Does that surprise you, captain?"

Captain Elisha was regarding the lawyer with a dazed expression. He breathed heavily. "Go on," he commanded. "But tell me this first. What was the name of this rubber concern of Bije's?"

"The Akrae Rubber company."

"I see—yes, yes. Akry, hey! Well, what about it? Tell me the rest."

"For the first year or two this company did nothing. Then in March of the third year the property was released by Mr. Warren to persons in Para, who were to develop and operate. The terms of his new lease were very advantageous. Royalties were to be paid on a sliding scale, and from the very first they were large. The Akrae company paid enormous dividends."

"Did, hey? I want to know!"

"Yes. In fact, for twelve years the company's royalties averaged $50,000 yearly."

"Whe-e-w!" Captain Elisha whistled. "Fifty thousand a year!" he repeated slowly. "Bije! Bije!"

"Yes. And three years ago the Akrae company sold its lease, sold out completely to the Para people, for $750,000."

"Godfreys mighty! Well," after a moment, "that's what I'd call a middlin' fair profit on a $20,000 investment—not to mention the dividends."

"Captain." Sylvester leaned forward now. "Captain," he repeated, "it is that sale and the dividends which are troubling us. I told you that the Akrae company was organized with 250 shares of stock. Your brother held 100 in his own name and fifty transferred to him by his dummy, Craven. What I did not tell you was that there were another hundred shares, held by some one, some one who paid $10,000 for them—we know that—and was, therefore, entitled to two-fifths of every dollar earned by the company during its existence and two-fifths of the amount received for the sale of the lease. So far as we can find out this stockholder has never received one cent."

"SWEET NELL."

Sir Peter Lely's Brush Makes Her a Rogue and Enchantress.

The new roomful of portraits which the National Gallery has borrowed from its next-door neighbor, the National Portrait Gallery, is astonishing in its range, befitting, as it does, with Henry VII. and ending with Henry James. Between these two centuries are some of the most notable figures in English history, both highroad history and by-way; but no lineaments so remain in my own mind as those of Nell Gwynn in Lely's presentment of her.

The overseas soldiers who seem to be doomed to return home without seeing either the Wallace Collection or the Tate should remember that the National Gallery, even although half of it is closed, is full of interest. As I was saying in the London Daily Express not long ago, many of the masterpieces now on view, while this new room constitutes a condensed Valhalla that should not be missed. For it contains not only some of our best portraiture, but our best personages, too.

Lady Jane Grey is here; Henry VIII., and two of his queens; Catherine of Aragon and Anne Boleyn; Mary Queen of Scots, Sir Walter Raleigh and Sir Thomas Grenham; Queen Mary, when a princess, with some miraculously bad spelling across her picture and few indications that her fame was to be extraordinary; Queen Elizabeth, all resplendent, as usual in her portraits, in brocade and enormous pearls; a scar her her darling Leicester and Shakespeare. The painters of the foregoing were principally foreigners, imported for the purpose (not all of whom to-day would be free from internment) but with Cromwell English artists came in. Robert Walker painted him and Sadler painted John Bunyan. The Duke of Buckingham, Nell Gwynn and the Countess of Shrewsbury are by Lely, and the Duke of Monmouth after execution—a very beautiful head—is by Scelles. Not the least attractive picture is Wolfe, by an unknown, but an accomplished and subtle hand. Sir John Moore is by his cousin, Nelson by Abbott, Cardinal Manning by Watts, Irving by Bastien Lepage (a fascinating work.) Finally, we come to Henry James, who qualified for the National Portrait Gallery by becoming a naturalized Briton just before his death, by Mr. Sargent.

But Mistress Eleanor Gwynn (who was buried in St. Martin's Church, hard by), what of her? Sir Peter Lely's brush makes it abundantly clear that she was a rogue and an enchantress, and also that for all her orange selling at Drury Lane or herring selling, according to Rochester) she could put on the fine authoritative lady. Boldness, mischief, generosity and love of life are all discernible in those victorious features, but one has difficulty in visualising her in high society. Cathcart chroniclers say, her eyes would almost totally disappear. It is difficult also, looking at this portrait, to reconcile Pepy's constant diminutives—"little Nelly" he so often calls her. She was, as a matter of fact, short and plump. Whether or not the Miss Nell Gwynn who induced Charles II to establish the Chelsea Hospital for old soldiers the Duke of Wellington determine, but, looking at the portrait, one feels sure that even if she did, not suggest it, it was just the sort of humane thing she might easily have occurred to her. Personally I side with the faction that believes her to have done so, and I hope that all the soldiers who go to see this collection will give her a specially kindly glance in consequence.—E. V. Lucas.

Initial Combinations.

The collection of initials and initial combinations that has come to become current since the war is a severe strain on the alphabet, and the result is rather perplexing at times.

For instance, "O.C." is mentioned prominently for Member of Parliament; now it stands equally for Military Police (not to mention Military Pipes). "C.B." is Confined to Barracks rather than Caught Bending. There is a bad double on the letter "O.C.," which may signify Commanding Officer or Conscientious Objector. Inverted, they give Officer Commanding or "Old Contemptible."

To attach "R.A." to your name does not necessarily imply you can paint. It may imply Royal Artillery, and that you can shoot. "W.O." used to mean walk over. It does still, in a sense; but it is the walk-over of the War Office that comes to our mind. And imagine confounding the Army Ordinance Department with the Ancient Order of Druids! "A.O.D." signifies either.

Perhaps "P.C." is the hardest-worked combination of all. It stands for Privy Councillor and Police Constable, Parish Council and Perpetual Curate, postcard and petty cash. To which may be added pie-crust, push-cart, parish church, poor chap, and pickled cabbage.—Tit-Bits.

WAR AND CRIMINALS.

Toronto Police Court Frequenters Have Reformed.

That the increase in crime in Toronto during the past year and especially in the past six months is in no way related to returned soldiers, but is due entirely to the hard times and lack of employment, is the unqualified opinion of the Toronto police.

An idea is prevalent among unthinking people that the rude and rough life of a soldier is conducive of mischief when the soldier is set free in civil life. As one returned soldier puts it, "the gentle civilians imagine that we have been turned loose in France like a collection of wild animals to hunt and tear down the Hun. And that consequently we will come home with the characteristics and habits of tigers and wolves."

But in war, law is a more rigid and all-embracing thing than in civil life, by far. In the army, a "crime" is a breach of the letter of the orders governing the soldier's daily life. If he does not get up in the morning when the bugle blows, he is "crimed." He is tried and convicted and sentenced. Imagine the employer sending out for a policeman when the stenographer arrives ten minutes late at the office! If a soldier wears his cap on the side of his head, or forgets his belt or puttees, or overlooks an officer passing, or was too busy to clean his boots, or neglected to shave or get a hair cut, he is charged, just as solemnly and wordily as in any police court, with a "crime."

It is no wonder, therefore, that Mr. Arthur Webb, clerk of the Toronto Police Court, observes "that soldiers have been conspicuous in the police court by their absence." No man who was fresh from a soldier, who received the stiff army training day and night for any reasonably long period, but would normally have his personal discipline well in hand.

One murder was committed by a returned soldier, but as was shown in the investigation, the soldier was drunk and had been unbalanced by wounds. The other crimes against civil law in Toronto by soldiers are practically negligible. Although no statistics are made on the subject by the Toronto police, it is considered a fact that the army has had a beneficial effect upon the young men who formerly were mischief-hunters. Instead of running in cliques, and "gangs" of mischief-hunters, the young men of Toronto who are practically all in khaki, run to soldier's cliques, where personal character, while a rough and ready thing, is manly, decent, "white."

Over against the absence of war-made criminals is an ever-increasing number of war-reformed crooks. Four years ago, a certain wave of young fellow who had several police court appearances to his credit suddenly found himself faced with a mighty serious charge. He pleaded for permission to go to the war, which then was young. And he went.

About eight months ago he returned to Toronto, smashed, weak, but with a little bit of medal ribbon for "gallantry" on his breast. He is now foreman on the loading department of a big warehouse, is going strong, making hay every day. There is no doubt about it in his old police friends' minds, that the war has given that man a new point of view.

There is also an oldish man, formerly a notorious loafer, a frequenter of all the city's disorderly houses, a perennial court case, who is now a commercial traveler, smart, alert, his war-service ribbon giving a distinction to his whole snappy bearing. If four years ago that man had been shown a photograph of himself as he is to-day, he would have sneered and laughed the world to scorn.

The list of such cases is a long one, but can't be studied in its true light till all the troops are home and have had such a chance to shake down into civil life.

Record Railway Building.

An enviable record in military railway construction was set up by the 1st Canadian Railway Troops in France, which laid during 1918 no less 173 miles, long, standard gauge, under front line conditions, in 90 days. Nor was this record an isolated achievement of this force, whose exploits at Cambral and later in other sectors resulted in their being showered with the congratulations of the British Commander-in-Chief, Sir Douglas Haig, Gen. H. Rawlinson, commander of the fourth army, and Maj.-Gen. S. D. Cruickshank, director-general of transportation.

Lt.-Col. Blair Ripley, D.S.O., who commanded the 1st C.R.T. overseas, arrived in Canada recently, after having crossed on the Scotian, and gave a brief account of the feats of his unit in their particular sphere of activity.

Through the Looking Glass

BY EVELYN NESBIT

It is a secret—a dreadful secret—and friend husband must not know.

If milady would be a radical, let her be a radical. It's part of the trend of the times to have liberal ideas and plans for reforming the world.

But—

Here is where the rub comes in. So many types and divers other subjects. But as for doing things, these women have no time for that. They are too busy flaunting what they believe to be the badges of radicalism. They just wear radical dresses with mannish collars and cuffs, and learn how to blow smoke rings at afternoon teas. These occupations leave them no time for action.

So they forget the real purpose of the ideas they claim to believe in.

The women who are really working for world progress are the quiet women who do not smoke and do not dress "radically." They are the good women who are bringing up their children properly, the teachers, the woman writers and business women. The women who are too busy with their work to have time for parading are the women who are making the world better and cleaner.

So discard your cigarettes and trousercrettes, and get to work, if you would achieve something worth while.

SENSIBLE COLLARS ON COAT

Fear of Return of High and Stiff-Wired Chokers Is Groundless, According to Report.

Now that the war has taught women not only how to dress their feet, but how to dress them, the new boxcoats are about to give a lesson in what to do about collars. For the very low collars and open throats have been so comfortable and almost universally becoming that most women have resolutely forgotten the days of high, tight-fitting things of bones, wires and scratches which tried tempers and frizzing machines, notes a writer in the New York Sun.

The boxcoat demands a waistcoat. The waistcoat calls for a collar, so there was no facing the issue of the collar question. And there is a new neck line called the double line. It is achieved by placing one material above the other, as, for instance, a series of darts from the neck line to the top line of the bodice, georgette over the brocade which stops at least four inches under the top line and is edged with a brighter blue around the top. This will be very lucky for the front, and in the back a slight collar of the brocade finishes off the collarless boxcoat at the neck.

Again, the straight, round military collar, which so often appears on these little coat collars for no further finish, as often it is braided in the most military effect or made of fine velvet or brocade; or, again, a band of high and straight around, something like the long ago "chin chin" things.

There is no fear of the stiff little boned and wired collar returning. However, the high collar is very smart—there is no doubt about that—but it has wonderful modifications.

All of the Red Cross workers, the Y. M. C. A., motor corps girls and other hard-working women so persistently demanded this sort of collar that it seems to be the mark of efficiency, and well-dressed women have avoided the other, at least in working hours. To the rest of us, though, frills are very dear, also very becoming.

Camera Banned at Front.

One of the most disappointing things to Canadians at the front was the ban upon cameras which prevented them from taking snaps of themselves taken at war and sent to the folks at home. Thus, priceless little souvenirs, showing the men in the trenches and depicting their rest billets in the French and Belgian villages to their friends and relatives in Canada were denied them.

When the first Canucks reached the front cameras, if not encouraged, were at least tolerated, but a few months later an order came out demanding that every camera be turned in. Thereafter, copies of each unit were required to collect the cameras and to make periodical reports to headquarters.

Possession of a camera was made a court-martial offence which increased in gravity as the months passed. For, innocent as was the average snapshot, some, if discovered upon a captured man, would certainly have been of value to the enemy intelligence about our positions. Sufficiently enough, though the British laid such stress upon this, the French and Belgians allowed men to use cameras at will.

He was a daring man who disobeyed the order to turn in his camera. Notwithstanding, a few cameras were used clandestinely, right through the war, and the pictures the lenses of these pocket recorders chronicled are doubtless highly prized by their owners. Though latterly the official photographers were very active, the photos they took lacked the intimacy of the private snaps taken at great risk by private individuals.

Now that the war is well over it seems likely that a number of these photos, taken without the knowledge or consent of the army authorities, will see the light of day. Some few which were obviously taken on the sly have already appeared in newspapers, books and periodicals.

LACE IS IN VOGUE

Decoration Promises to Be In Demand This Spring.

Coming Season to See Revival of Trimmed Batiste or Lawn Frocks Necessary to Women.

Are you aware of the fact that we are about to experience a revival of interest in lace?

Doubtless this has been brought about in part by the men and women whose business interests center in the sale of lace. Moreover, writes a correspondent, it is again possible to get laces that were unavailable during the war. The revival of lace will mean that numerous women of Europe will have a means of earning a living; that we can help them to help themselves during reconstruction.

Real laces will be especially in demand, and this is in keeping with the revival of interest in all hand-wrought fabrics and tissues. But we are not going to be content with the old-time mode of applying lace, which was too often stiff and prim.

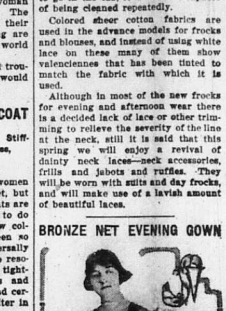
Designers are going back to the lavish method of the Renaissance, when ecclesiastics combined the most costly of laces with the most gorgeous of embroideries and silks in the vestments worn on great festivals, and to the great court ladies of those days, who vied with the great prelates in their lavish use of lace and brilliant fabrics.

The prediction is made that this spring will see a revival of the sort of lace-trimmed batiste or lawn frocks that we used to regard as indispensable to every woman's wardrobe. If made by hand they require days and days of work, and if by machine actually miles of fine stitching. There are yards and yards, moreover, of lace insertion, and sometimes innumerable tucks. The result is a frock that is perennially fresh, for if it is not made to go in the tub, it is at least capable of being cleaned repeatedly.

Colored sheer cotton fabrics are used in the advance models for frocks and blouses, and instead of using white lace on them many of the shadow valenciennes that has been tinted to match the fabric with which it is used.

Although in most of the new frocks for evening and afternoon wear there is a decided lack of lace or other trimming to relieve the severity of the line at the neck, still it is safe to say that this spring we will enjoy a revival of dainty neck laces—neck accessories, frills and jabots and ruffles. They will be worn with suits and day frocks, and will make use of a lavish amount of beautiful laces.

BRONZE NET EVENING GOWN



The above is regarded as one of the season's charming evening gowns. It is in bronze net, beaded in the same color.

PALE COLORS FOR THE GIRLS

Blue and Pink the Standard Combination With Maize and Mauve a Favorite Blend.

Pale blue and pink is still the combination for girls of eighteen; maize and mauve, another happy blend, with some pink-plaited foundations, also finds favor with younger women.

Silver metal lace allied with pale blue velvet ribbons and a posy of flowers are the suggestions for one dainty confection, with long wisp sleeves and a many-flounced skirt. For a tall girl there's a dress pretty enough to tempt one to break the tenth commandment.

Of flesh-colored crepe de chine, the V-shaped neck is edged with net, while the sleeves are of georgette. The skirt is made of plain crepe de chine, three rows of pearl fringe giving the triple-skirt effect rather in favor just now. The piece round the waist is also thickly incrusted with motifs of pearl beads.

Another frock is of that romance-inspiring moonlight blue crepe, and the new trimmings are of pompons called les nenettes. Draped tulle is responsible for the sleeves, with scarf-ends held in by a charmeuse belt. On the corsage and top of skirt is a touch of beautiful embroidery.

Smocks for Girls.

The pretty little cotton smocks and frocks worn by Miss Eight-Year-Old are made smart with cross-stitching or something in brightly contrasting wool. Pale green cotton crepe de chine, for example, is trimmed with stitches of rose wool: All kinds of wool dresses have oriental effects done in coarse stitches on the pockets, collars or sash ends. Wool embroidery many times ornaments the frock, about the neck, as a substitute for the white collar worn formerly.

TOBACCO.

Something About the Outlook of the Industry In Dominion.

The hour has struck for the domestic tobacco industry to assert itself and take a strong position, in Canada at last.

As far as Southern Ontario is concerned there is no doubt that even if the acreage devoted to the production of fine tobacco is much increased it will take many years before the tobacco growers can meet the demand for that type of tobacco. The area of soils especially adapted to that type of leaf is comparatively limited, and as the curing of that tobacco requires special attention it is only gradually that such development will take place.

However, there should be no doubt as to the future of the market, especially if we bear in mind that the demand for Canadian fluecured tobacco has always been on the increase during the last three years. War conditions may account for this, but it should not be forgotten that the three last crops of flue tobacco have been produced under the most unfavorable weather conditions which have ever been experienced for years. In a normal season it will be possible to raise a much better type of leaf, as far as the color at least is concerned with probably a little better yield which will be more remunerative to the grower.

The White Burley crop, though a little larger in 1918 than it was in 1917 and 1916 has not yet reached its normal output.

There is, therefore, room for development in 1919, especially if one takes into account that a large Canadian concern has stepped into the field for the first time last year, and was one of the strongest bidders for White Burley. There is no reason why, if these manufacturers are satisfied with the experiment they have undertaken, they will not bid again for the 1919 crop and thus create an active competition.

It is impossible to foresee what will be the price offered for the Canadian Burley of the 1919 crop. Still, unless there is a considerable increase, which is doubtful owing to the fact that tobacco-growing cannot be developed as rapidly as other crops, as it requires curing barn accommodation, which means extra labor, low prices can hardly be expected. The prospects for a large crop of White Burley cannot be better.

In Quebec the situation is not as clear. While the Quebec binders were sought for at 30 cents a pound early last fall it looks as if the Canadian packers were somewhat shy at present to go to 30 cents a pound for the same grade of tobacco.

As to the possibilities of producing cigar-fillers in Canada, it is true that they have not yet been developed, but we should recognize that their future is by no means distant. It would be well worth while if some of the Canadian manufacturers could investigate the possibilities of the Canadian Zimmer Spanish, for instance. So far most of the Canadian fillers offered to the Canadian trade come from the Comestock Spanish. We all know that this is not a real filler tobacco, but we also all know, at least those who are dealing in tobacco in the best districts of the Province of Quebec, that a first-class grade of filler can be produced in this country.

Objectors Are Released.

Most of the conscientious objectors to military service, who were sent to Portsmouth Penitentiary for terms of from two years to life imprisonment, have been liberated after serving but a few months of their sentences. There were 30 in all who claimed that they were really conscientious objectors and should never have been confined with moral delinquents, as they did not come within the category of criminals as that term is generally understood.

PLAN MODEL TOWN.

New Village Will Be Situated on Lake Timiskaming.

On Lake Timiskaming, there is growing up a town which may become within a few years a place of pilgrimage for those social reformers who have come to realize really modern living. Such a village, under the beautiful conditions of which the main roads converge; a village green that will be the focus of the recreation of the community, and a farsighted scheme of arboreal treatment. Town-planner, surveyors, architects and engineers are now engaged in the project, and by skilful arrangements have laid out the streets with grades, for the most part of 1 in 20, a limiting one, where a more rigid plan of rectangular character would have necessitated grades of not less than one in seven. The workmen's houses will mostly be semi-detached with a few groups of three to six, and in all cases will provide gardens and extensive views over the lake. Attention to home beauty will be encouraged, and in the interest, and the rights of the community to protect the town from unlicensed ugliness and land speculation will be recognized, as they can so easily be, by the consent of the community. Plans are being shaped whereby the workmen can acquire their home by easy payments, and the domestic exile that so often accompanies forest labor may be abolished.

A Venturesome Calf.

A seven-months-old calf belonging to D. Ridwell, of Lansdowne, Ont., bridge, climbed on to a straw stack, then scrambled to the roof of the driving house; from this it was only a step to the roof of the stable and from the stable roof it got on to the barn. Not satisfied, it scrambled to the hip roof peak of the barn, jumped down the other side, and fell 15 feet to the ground, receiving injuries so serious that it had to be killed. The calf was well bred.

EGGS FOR WINTER USE

SEVERAL METHODS BY WHICH TO PRESERVE THEM.

Waterglass Solution Is Best and Earthen Crocks or Jars Are Preferred as Containers Because Glazed Surface Prevents Chemical Action—Work Should Be Performed In Spring When There Are Surplus Eggs on Most Farms.

Spring is the season when there is a surplus of eggs on most farms. For this reason it is desirable that a supply be preserved at home to be used next fall and winter when eggs are hard to get and high in price. There are several methods of preserving eggs which have proven very successful and which, because they are cheap, simple, and effective, should be put into practice more extensively.

Eggs to be preserved must be fresh, and should be placed in the preserving container as soon as possible after they are laid. One of the best methods of preserving is by the use of waterglass, a pale yellow odorless, syrupy liquid that can be bought by the quart or gallon from the druggist or poultry supply man. It should be diluted in the proportion of one part of waterglass to nine parts of water which has been boiled and allowed to cool. Earthenware crocks or jars are the best containers, since their glazed surface prevents chemical action from the solution. The crocks or cans should be scalded and allowed to cool before they are used. A container holding five gallons will accommodate 15 dozen eggs and will require one quart of waterglass.

Half fill the container with the waterglass solution and place the eggs in it. Eggs can be added from day to day as they are obtained, making sure that the eggs are covered by about two inches of waterglass solution. Cover the container and place it in a cool place where it will not have to be moved. Look at it from time to time, and if there seems to be danger of too much evaporation, add sufficient cool boiled water to keep the eggs covered. Eggs removed from the solution should be rinsed in clean, cold water. Before they are boiled holes should be pricked in the large ends with a needle to prevent them from cracking.

Limewater also is satisfactory for preserving eggs and is slightly less expensive than waterglass. A solution is made by placing two or three pounds of unslaked lime in five gallons of water which has been boiled and allowed to cool, and allowing the mixture to stand until the lime settles and the liquid is clear. The eggs should be placed in a clean earthenware jar or other suitable container and covered to a depth of two inches with the liquid. Remove the eggs as desired, rince in clean, cold water, and use immediately.

Transplanting Large Trees.

Trees from 4 to 10 inches in diameter can be very successfully transplanted by the following methods: Early spring before the trees start to leaf, transplant, a trench 15 to 24 inches deep should be dug around the tree, leaving a ball of earth from 4 to 6 feet in diameter, depending on the size of the tree and the amount of earth which can be moved later with the tree. Good drainage must be provided and the trench filled with a rich compost. During the summer the cut roots will throw out numerous new roots into the rich compost and in the following spring the tree can be lifted with this mass of fibrous roots practically intact; these quickly re-establish themselves in a new position. Regular watering will usually be essential to the success of starting of large trees. Two or three lines of tile placed in position at transplanting leading well down under the roots will afford the most satisfactory method.

Put Loafer Acres to Work.

A farm of large size with irregular outline, or one badly cut up by ditches or needless fencing, is operating under a handicap. The increased ease of working and the reduction of the cost of working, would justify much labor and expense on many farms in the rearrangement of fields and in clearing away obstructions. Drainage of land is in many cases the most profitable and desirable method of enlarging crop acreage.

Strive for More Chickens.

Larger poultry yards, better poultry house, more poultry feed and more layers should be planned for next year. There will be a demand and good prices for eggs and poultry. These foods should be served on farmers' tables as well as in the city.

Kept Guns Going All Night.

A recent report of Gen. Ironside, commanding the Allied troops at Archangel, gives a thrilling description of a Canadian artillery lieutenant. In support of the Allies were some Russian troops, and the lieutenant left his battery without infantry defence. Retreat was cut off, but the lieutenant kept his battery going and fought the Bolsheviki all night and finally withdrew his guns without losing one. Gen. Ironside has recommended him for decoration and promotion. Canadians there have absolute confidence in Gen. Ironside, and this has relieved anxiety regarding Canadians at Archangel.

AWAITING THEIR DISCHARGE.

Canadian Soldiers Among Green Derbyshire Hills.

A short time ago I heard someone talking about the C.D.D. at Buxton, and I asked what the letters stood for.

"The Canadian Discharge Depot," was the reply.

Immediately the cruel meaning of the word "discharge" flashed through my mind. I recalled the way in which the authorities of the European nations, including those of the Motherland, had treated their ex-soldiers in the past; how the fear of unemployment and the spectre of famine haunted the lives and the homes of these men, eating into their minds and destroying the very spirit of bravery which had made them willing to offer even their lives in defence of freedom.

I reflected that the workhouse had been the reward from the nation in the past for thousands of our heroes, while glorified titles and pensions had been given to a few.

Such thoughts led me on to consider what this country and Canada fail to do her part for these men who had fought for her? What would be Canada's first step toward helping to bring these men again into the field of construction away from the fields of destruction, I wondered.

So I took a train for Buxton. Conflicting reports had reached me concerning Canada's policy on behalf of her soldiers. I wanted to see and to know for myself.

The Buxton C.D.D. receives only the soldiers having dependents. Buxton is one of the great health resorts, and is therefore an ideal hinterland of England." It is a pretty town lying in a valley. It has curving streets, with buildings of great stone rising from the hills of Derbyshire, which surround the town. The district is rich in minerals, for the old Roman baths still exist there. The fields on the hillsides and the moors look like checkerboards. They are divided into squares by stone fences, having been picked up hundreds of years ago, so that the ground might be made fit for cultivation. These fields are a perpetual green, although on the first day of my visit there were little drifts of snow behind the fences and in the corners. But it was early in March, and spring was just showing herself here and there in the sunniest exposures, where little flowers were trying to open their petals to the sun, and the early spring birds were singing.

This was the scene on a Sunday morning. In the distance I heard the music of a band, and bands of soldiers were marching to the Hippodrome Theatre for morning service. The only building large enough to hold them. They were the soldiers nearly filled it, leaving little room for civilians.

"Rise, rise, that on earth do dwell," sang the soldiers, accompanied by the band. Then there were hymns and the prayers for to-day, and the chaplain, Capt. Rhues Hunter, of Toronto, took for his text: "Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven."

It was a simple sermon, of plain words to be understood by plain men, and with the fervor of a deep thinker, an honest leader, and every man in the audience heard and understood. The preacher fitted his text to everyday ideals to guide men's lives, to prepare them for the New Canada. He spoke of the moral rather than the greater than physical; he told them that true words cut deeper than the sword. Let their thoughts be clean; let them return home determined to be "on active service" in the field of industry as they had been in the field of war."

I could see that the soldiers were deeply affected. Their stillness and attention proved that. I studied their faces and noted the interest those faces showed. Never have I attended a military church service where the audience seemed so to grasp the purpose of their lives.—Special correspondence of Toronto Telegram.

Salmon In Puget Sound.

L. H. Darwin, State Fish Commissioner of Washington State, says the signing of a treaty between the United States and Canada for the protection and replenishment of the sockeye salmon in Puget Sound and British Columbia waters depends largely upon the action to be taken by the Washington State Legislature at Olympia. Nothing, he says, has so far been done in regard to the recommendation of the United States and Canadian Governments that have been forwarded to Olympia. The proposed federal recommendations are the result of the work of the joint American-Canadian commission which met in Seattle last year. Similar regulations will be submitted to the Legislature of British Columbia, and a treaty will be drawn up between the two countries. If the State of Washington fails to take action at the present session, nothing can be done for a year, so far, there is no knowledge of the proposed arrangement being considered by the Provincial Legislature. It is acknowledged by all the fisheries interests affected in the Puget Sound and British Columbia waters that drastic action is necessary if the sockeye salmon supply is not to be eliminated. Joint action must be taken by Ottawa and Washington to make any conservation method have the desired results. The sockeye spawning beds are mainly in the Fraser river in British Columbia, so that action by the Canadian and Provincial Governments is essential.

Gen. Ironside.

According to the newspapers, Gen. Ironside, now commanding in North Russia, passed as a Boer during the German advance in 1914. He was in charge of native convoys which attacked German forces. His object was to study German methods of fighting in Africa. He was never suspected as he speaks Dutch fluently.

When Gen. Ironside left Berlin at the end of the campaign he had a dispute concerning certain payments due him. A German officer had blustered loudly, another struck Gen. Ironside across the face with his whip. The general controlled himself with supreme effort because he had complete maps and notes about the whole campaign stitched inside his tunic.

Pessimist vs. Optimist.

Here is another illustration of the difference between the pessimist and the optimist: "A pessimist is a man who believes that it will take centuries for the world to recover from the blow to civilization; and an optimist is a man who retorts that there will be plenty of centuries."

DAUGHTERS OF THE EMPIRE

U. E. Loyalist Chapter I. O. D. E.

We desire to thank sincerely Mrs. S. Kimmerly for the sleeveless sweaters she is knitting for us for the men of the mercantile marine, one of which was received a few days ago.

In this connection we would like to inform all our members and workers that we have just received from the "Friends of France" Toronto, a parcel containing samples of small woolen knitted garments children which the above Society would be very glad if our knitters would be willing to copy and knit during the summer, to assist in supplying warm garments next winter to the very needy little children of heroic France. The chapter will feel very pleased if its members and friends will take out wool for this purpose. Do not forget to be present at our workroom on Thursday afternoon, June 5th, when tea will be served, wool will be given out and when we hope to finish up the sewing still on hand.

A good opportunity has been given to finish up necessary work at home, so it is earnestly hoped all will make it a point to attend.

In acknowledging our sincere appreciation of the generous kindness shown by the "On We Glide" orchestra in consenting to play without charge of any kind for the Lennox & Addington Branch of the Navy League of Canada, at its lecture at the Armouries on Thursday evening, May 29th, we feel sure we are only echoing the sentiments entertained by this branch of the Navy League, who are deeply grateful for any assistance given.

THE THIRD MACKENZIE.

Temporary Leader of Liberal Party Has Never Been Defeated.

Daniel D. Mackenzie, the new temporary leader of the Liberal party at Ottawa, is described by Parliamentary observers as a "two-fisted, fighting man," a dour and canny Scot.

One may imagine the trusty and faithful type of the man from the fact that in twenty-five years of public life he has never been defeated in any election.

He is the third Mackenzie in the line of Liberal leadership in Canada, and it is just a century since the first, William Lyon Mackenzie, landed in Canada. That first Mackenzie was not a Liberal leader in the party meaning of the word, but stood for liberty and the free institutions in Canada. The second Mackenzie was Alexander, who was Liberal Premier of Canada for five years shortly after Confederation.

This latest Mackenzie has had a distinguished public career. He is now sixty years of age, having been born at Lake Ainslie, Cape Breton, in 1859. He entered the profession of law and served as mayor of North Sydney and Commissioner of Schools for Cape Breton County for five consecutive years. In 1900 he was elected to the Nova Scotia Legislature and to the House of Commons in 1904, in which he has remained ever since. From 1906 to 1908 he was judge of the County Court District No. 7 of Nova Scotia. As his name would indicate, he is a Presbyterian.

While a very aggressive fighter, Mr. Mackenzie has till the present remained out of the limelight. In the Parliamentary debates in the first year of the war, when the Government was attacked on several points, Mr. Mackenzie took a prominent part. Sir Wilfrid Laurier thought so highly of Mr. Mackenzie that he chose him to sit as his deskmate in the Commons during the last season of Parliament.
